In 1938 and 1939 Mr. Gandhi took a great deal of interest in the affairs of the States subjects and supported their demand for civil liberties, the reign of law and responsible government under the aegis of their respective rulers. At first, the States people were told that they should keep their movements apart from that of the Congress in British India and that they should rely more on their own strength than on the help of the Congress. This led to intense political activity in most of the States and an unprecedented awakening among the comparatively backward people of the States. In several States the movement took the form of direct action, disobedience of laws, refusal to pay taxes, etc., exactly on the lines of the civil disobedience movement in British India.

This led to numerous complications. In the first place, the people of the States were not qualified by tradition or training to conduct the fight for more political rights, so that in many a State the movement collapsed through the weakness of the instruments. In the second place the in the direct action camp outbreaks of violence and had therefore to be suspended. These movements also led to unexpected and undesirable consequences beyond the boundaries of the States. The Princes naturally grew hostile to the Congress and became suspicious of Congress leaders in particular and British Indian politicians in general. Undoubtedly this development in the States further diminished the prospect of an early inauguration of the federal scheme, as the Rulers of States became apprehensive of their future in a federation in which the British Indian and Congress influence would certainly be considerable. Indirectly speaking, the Princes began to think in terms of devising measures which would protect them in any future arrangements for the governance of India as a whole.

On the credit side, it must be admitted that this new activity aroused a great deal of consciousness among the people of the States which cannot fail to add to their political education and widen their outlook. Either in response to their subjects' clamour or with a view to anticipating their demands some Rulers liberalised their administrations. The Viceroy, too, advised the Princes gradually to associate their subjects in the conduct of the affairs of their States. All these were to the good, but the movements in the States were much ahead of their time. At all events the soil had not been properly prepared.

It was a realisation of this fact, perhaps, which made Mr. Gandhi late in 1934 advise the suspension of the agitation in the States. Thus ended at least for a time a state of activity akin to the placid life in Indian India (See last year's edition of the Indian Year Book).

In the parliamentary sphere Mr. Gandhi secured a number of triumphs. Many of his pet ideas in the field of education, social reform and economic equity were taken up by the provincial nationalists. He returned the compliment by stoutly denouncing them and denouncing their critics and opponents. This created for him a number of enemies who, though moderate in outlook, joined the ranks of extremists in the Congress on account of their common hatred of Mr. Gandhi and Gandhism.

Side by side with the growth of Mr. Gandhi's influence under the parliamentary regime, amounting almost to dictatorship as far as the various provincial governments are concerned, there arose a new wave of opposition to his policy and method. The revolt came from Congressmen themselves who condemned the "growing reformist mentality within the Congress" and "attempts to compromise with British Imperialism." A section of Congressmen openly challenged the wisdom of Mr. Gandhi's policy and urged the return to the bad old days of an organised fight against the British power. The novel has always a peculiar attraction in politics and this revulsion of feeling against the comparatively dull working of the constitutional machinery by the Congress drew a fair following in the country.

As already pointed out the leftist movement had a certain number of wind-falls through adventitious circumstances. Men disappointed in the pursuit of perquisites attaching to the parliamentary programme joined the ranks of the leftists. Leaders of the Komun and labour movements tried to discredit Mr. Gandhi and Gandhism. Attempts to pull them up and to re-train their harmful activities only resulted in confirming their hostility to Mr. Gandhi's leadership.

Then occurred an unprecedented event in the Congress history. Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose dared to defy Mr. Gandhi and stood for reelection to the presidency of the Congress. He succeeded partly through the vote of the leftists, partly through the suspicion (assiduously cultivated by Mr. Bose) that Mr. Gandhi and his colleagues were trying to compromise with the British Government on the issue of Federation, partly because of a growing resentment against the firmness with which discipline in the ranks of the parliamentary parties in the various provinces was enforced by the Gandhian High Command, partly through the operation of inter-provincial jealousies and partly because of the personal popularity of Mr. Bose as against the fact that his rival for the presidency was comparatively unknown in Upper India. Mr. Bose's success was hailed as a defeat for Mr. Gandhi and admitted by the latter as such. Mr. Bose could not make good his success in the presidential election, for the same people who voted for him refused to endorse his programme—rather than the absence of it—and within three months dethroned him.

Mr. Bose and his cohorts soon overthrew the mark and gradually lost the little favouring they had. Mr. Bose himself was punished in the disciplinary sense. The forthright course of Bengal politics and the action taken by the Congress headquarters against the provincial Congress organisation in Bengal were exploited by Mr. Bose for a time but with no great success. The outbreak of the war served to divert attention to more important issues and the internal differences in the Congress began to be forgotten. Even so, Mr. Bose tried to make capital of the interviews Mr. Gandhi and other Congress leaders had with the Viceroy. He said they were part of "a conspiracy to compromise with British imperialism." Here again he was given a cold shoulder. At Rangoon where the annual session of the Congress was held in March 1940, Mr. Gandhi triumphed in an unqualified manner and secured the almost unanimous support of Congressmen for his policy and methods.

By this time, however, pressure of circumstances had brought about the termination of the parliamentary phase of Congress activity. Shortly after the declaration of war, the Congress Ministries in the various provinces were asked to resign. Owing to the impossibility of forming Ministries to replace them, the Governors assumed executive powers under section 93 of the Government of India Act which visualised, and provided for, such an emergency. This act has since been endorsed by Parliament which has extended the duration of the gubernatorial administration by twelve months.

At the moment the Congress is preparing for civil disobedience as a protest against the British Government's refusal to concede its demand for a declaration of Britain's war aims vis-à-vis India, recognising India's freedom and agreeing to give Indians the right to determine their future status and constitution through a constituent assembly convened on the basis of adult franchise and anything near it. Whether and when civil disobedience will be started it is difficult to say at the time of writing. Whatever the future, the Congress has ceased to be Government but is still within the pale of law.

CONGRESS MINISTRIES.

Shortly after the elections, in pursuance of the Faizpur resolution, a meeting of the A. I. C. C. was held at Delhi, followed by a convention of members of the various provincial legislatures.

On the question of office acceptance the Committee authorized and permitted the acceptance of Ministerial offices in provinces where the Congress commanded a majority in the legislatures; "provided ministership shall not be accepted unless the Leader of the Congress Party in the legislature is satisfied and is able to state publicly that the Governor will not use his special powers of interference or set aside the advice of Ministers in regard to their constitutional activities."

In due course the leaders of the majority parties were summoned by the various Governors to assist them in the formation of cabinets. The leaders repeated the Delhi condition and refused to be satisfied with a general assurance by the Governors of help, sympathy and co-operation. Thereupon, they withdrew, refusing to form ministries unless the A. I. C. C.'s demand was complied with. The Governors then invited leaders of minority parties to form cabinets.

A prolonged controversy ensued in which Mr. Gandhi and the Congress leaders, the Secretary of State for India, the Viceroy, the Governors and leaders of moderate opinion in India took part. (For details see last year's Indian Year Book) the controversy was brought to a conclusion with a lengthy statement issued by the Viceroy late in June 1937. After giving an authoritative reaffirmation of the position of the Governors and the British Government, namely, that the Act itself and the Instrument of Instructions precludes the Governors from giving an advance guarantee of the kind demanded by the Viceroy dispelled the doubts expressed by Congressmen that real power would not be surrendered to the Ministers and that the latter would be subject to vexatious nagging and interference at every turn, preventing them from carrying out their policy and programme. His Excellency made it clear that, apart from the intention of the framers of the Act and of Parliament to confer on Ministers responsible to their own legislatures unrestricted powers to administer the provincial government, the Governors were all anxious so to work the Act and so exercise their special powers as not to precipitate an irretrievable clash.

The Viceroy's statement, although it did not formally concede the demand of the Congress, was eminently conciliatory in tone. It gave in spirit what it could not give in letter. It convinced the Congress and Mr. Gandhi that the British Government wished the Congress to take seriously to the constitutional experiment on which it had embarked. The influence of this was not lost on the Working Committee of the Congress which met shortly after and decided that the leaders of Congress Parties in the various legislatures should proceed to undertake the task of forming Cabinets without any condition. Thus the Congress became the Government in six of the eleven provinces. It was a great change for the Congress which since 1920 had been in the wilderness.

Nevertheless, the leaders of the Congress Parties in the provincial legislatures assumed office with confidence and discharged their duties with skill and ability. Almost everyone of the new Ministries had an initial handicap in the shape of financial stringency, but by means of economy and retrenchment they managed to produce budgets which were, generally speaking, applauded. In the field of law and order, they behaved with efficiency and firmness and put down every attempt to public peace and tranquillity. This was especially so in Bombay and the United Provinces, where within a few weeks of assuming office the Ministries were faced with a serious labour situation. The Madras Ministry was called upon to tackle the activities of some extremist Congressmen who went about preaching violence and they met the situation with commendable promptitude and firmness. Similarly, in Bihar the Ministry was faced with attack from two camps: the zemindars threatened satyagraha owing to certain land tenure reform measures proposed by Government, while the peasants showed fight on the ground that the remedy proposed was not adequate. It was a delicate situation, but the Government, aided by right-wing leaders, tackled over the difficulty by carrying the zemindars and peasants with them, although the peasant leaders, who were extremist Congressmen continued to give trouble to the Ministry.

It is not possible in a short survey to recount the activities of all the Governments run by Congressmen. Broadly speaking, most of them undertook beneficent measures calculated to help the underdog, although in an attempt to do so and in pursuance of a policy of Prohibition some Congress Ministries levied taxation which bore unduly heavily on trade and industry especially on those who provide the capital for the economic regeneration of the country. A few Governments sought to increase their revenue by levying a tax on agricultural incomes. Most of them undertook more or less drastic measures to reduce and remove the burden of debt on the agricultural population. Prohibition of alcoholic liquor and drugs in small areas an experiment preliminary to the proclamation of total prohibition throughout the province was introduced in most of the Congress provinces. The Bihar and the United Provinces Governments took concerted measures to rationalise the sugar industry from top to bottom and tried to ensure for the grower of sugar-cane a minimum economic price for his produce. Attempts were made to reform education, local self-government and several branches of public activity.

Barring a few cases here and there, the Services, both in the Secretariats and in the districts, co-operated willingly with their new masters. The Governors too acted in conformity with the spirit of the assurance given by His Excellency the Viceroy, except for a crisis which occurred early in 1938 in Bihar and the United Provinces (see later). On the whole provincial autonomy was worked by the Congress and the representatives of the British Governments with a great deal of cordiality and efficiency.

An important development, as far as the Congress was concerned, which occurred during the year 1937-39 was the growing influence of the Congress on the masses. This was due not only to the fact that the outlaw Congress had become His Majesty's Government in the majority of the provinces, but also to the encouragement which the various provincial Governments gave to the Congress. The membership of the Congress which was about 600,000 odd before 1937 multiplied itself nearly tenfold in the course of two years. This increase in the coupled with the over-arching Congress Parties in the provincial legislatures, led them to what critics described as "steam roller methods" so far as the non-Congress opposition was concerned. The Opposition in most cases was a disorganised group which exerted little influence on the policy and programme of the provincial Governments. Side by side with this influx of new members into the Congress, corruption crept into its ranks. The prestige and power of the Congress coupled with the opportunities for social and political advancement held out by offices in the organisations attracted a large number of new recruits. Many people wished to have a place in the sun, and in order to get themselves elected to offices or membership on Congress committees, the aspirants enrolled thousands upon thousands of members with a view to getting into places of power and influence through the votes of such new recruits. Bogus memberships, impersonations at elections, undue influence, bribery and coercion were practised on a large scale. Mr. Gandhi and his right-wing colleagues were shocked, but were helpless. Repeated attempts were made to overhaul the Congress constitution so as to prevent malpractices and it was not until the middle of 1939 that steps were taken to discourage bogus enrolment and corrupt practices at elections.

1938 CRISES.

While the Congress Ministries were engaged on the one hand in promoting the welfare of the masses and on the other administering the provinces with firmness, the left-wing Congressmen were spitting fire and loudly protesting against the restrictions placed on freedom of speech and movement. They have untrammelled license to go about where they liked and incite people to acts of violence. They seemed anxious to prevent the growth of what they described as the reformist mentality among the Congress Ministers.

Meanwhile their hands were strengthened by the non-release of certain political prisoners in Bihar and the United Provinces. This was one of the promises made by the Congress in its election manifesto, and the Ministries' failure to give effect to it was put down by the extremists to their weakness. The death from hunger strike of a political prisoner in Dacca (Bengal) provided a war cry for them. Thus the demand for the release of all political prisoners assumed first class importance. An additional complication was introduced by the bearing which the release of prisoners in the two Congress provinces mentioned above had on the release of the detenus and political prisoners in Bengal, which was not under the control of the Congress.

On the eve of the annual session of the Congress the Working Committee met at Wardha and passed a resolution urging the Premiers of Bihar and the United Provinces to press for the release of the outstanding political prisoners.

What happened in the next few days is still a mystery. There was some bungling somewhere. Pandit Nehru who was still President of the Congress is said to have given instructions to the Premiers of the two provinces to back up their demand for the release with a threat to resign. The Congress executive did not apparently authorise such a course. Nor did Mr. Gandhi himself appear to be in favour of such a drastic step. As things happened, the Premiers insisted on their right to order the wholesale release of all political prisoners, but the Governors concerned argued that the case of each prisoner might be examined before the order was issued. The Governors pointed out that indiscriminate release might lead to a situation in which the peace and tranquillity not only of their respective provinces but also of adjacent provinces would be threatened. The Premiers demanded that nothing should be done to restrict their responsibility for the administration of law and order and gave a few hours' ultimatum to their respective Governors that unless the latter agreed to a wholesale release they (the Premiers) would resign. At this stage the Governor-General stepped in under section 265 of the Government of India Act and withheld consent for the release order. The two Ministries resigned.

A few tense days ensued. Other Ministries seemed hardly inclined to copy the example of Bihar and the United Provinces. Everybody deplored the developments in the two provinces, and everyone was confused. Even the members of the Working Committee did not seem to know what exactly to do in the circumstances.

Mr. Gandhi once again stepped into the breach and relieved the tension with an appeal to the Governor-General and the British Government to reconsider their decision to withhold consent to the release ordered by the two Ministries. He challenged the application of section 265 of the Government of India Act that the Ministers should have the right to direct the administration of the provinces in accordance with the assurance given by the Viceroy in July 1937. He concluded with the hope that the British authority had not become tired of the Congress Governments. To this Lord Linlithgow issued a reply which was couched in conciliatory terms. While reaffirming that the Governor-General or the Governor could not divest themselves of the special responsibility placed on them by the Act of preserving the peace and tranquillity of the country as a whole and of the provinces individually, His Excellency declared that the Ministers would be enabled to examine the cases of individual prisoners with a view to their ultimate release. The Governor-General, too, hoped that the Ministers could resume their interrupted labours. The Viceroy's statement eased the tension considerably and the Premiers withdrew their resignations. The crisis which a few days ago threatened to envelop the whole of India passed off without leaving any trace on the political life of the country.

Hardly had the Bihar and the United Provinces ministerial crises died down when another arose in Orissa which too threatened to affect the position of other Congress ministries all over the country. It started with the appointment of Mr. (now Sir) J. R. Dain as acting Governor of Orissa in place of Sir John Hubback who had planned to go to England on four months' leave. All sections of public opinion in India objected to this appointment on the ground that it was unsound in principle to promote a subordinate official to a position of superiority over the ministry. The Orissa Ministers had in addition to this certain personal reasons against the appointment of Mr. Dain because he and the ministry had not pulled together very well. As arrangements for Sir John Hubback's leave and for the appointment of Mr. Dain to act in his place had been made His Majesty's Government announced the appointment. That was the signal for loud protests from Congressmen who prepared to carry out their threat to precipitate an all-India crisis. Mr. Gandhi backed up the Orissa Ministry's case. He wrote: "The whole of the sting lies in a subordinate official becoming an acting Governor of a province with whom the Ministers are expected to work and almost daily submit documents for signature and who will preside at their meetings." It was rumoured at the time that even if the Orissa Ministry resigned, His Majesty's Government would be carried on by an interim ministry and that after the termination of the period of acting Governorship the Congress would be invited again to form the Ministry. Mr. Gandhi warned the authorities that the Congress would not be a party to such an arrangement. In response to unanimous public opinion His Majesty's Government rescinded Mr. Dain's appointment, Sir John Hubback magnanimously agreeing to cancel his leave.

This was the first time that an order of His Majesty regarding a gubernatorial appointment was cancelled after publication. The Congress duly announced it as its second triumph of the year.

During the past year or two several attempts were made by Mr. Gandhi and the Congress leaders to bring about an agreement between the Congress and the All-India Muslim League. The failure of the negotiations embittered already strained relationship between the Congress and Muslim communities. Numerous communal disturbances occurred in the Congress-governed provinces. Most of them could be traced to complaints against Congress Governments; the Muslims contended that the Congress Governments were unjust to them while the Hindus protested that they were sacrificed in an attempt to placate the Muslims. The Governments themselves were in a very unenviable position; if they took action against those who spread malicious propaganda they were accused of invading civil liberties, while if they allowed the propagandists to do what they liked, life and property were placed in serious jeopardy.

On the political plane spokesmen of the Muslim League complained that the interests of that community were not adequately looked after and more than one individual and committee toured the country and collected data in this behalf and published them as so many charge sheets against the Congress Governments. To these the Governments concerned issued lengthy replies purporting to substantiate their claim that they were more than just and generous to the minority community.

This controversy of accusation and rebuttal continued unabated—if anything it was aggravated by the activities of the Congress in the States.

Indeed, this controversy eclipsed all other aspects of public life during the year 1939-40. Any movement which focusses public attention on differences between two major communities is naturally important; but when the differences have an undoubted bearing on the future status and constitution of the entire country and when, indirectly, they influence Indians' attitude to the war, it does acquire extraordinary significance.

On the communal plane, the Muslim League's charge against the Congress ministries and the latter's downright repudiation thereof produced a state of affairs which did not conduce to public peace. There was many a disturbance between the Hindus and Muslims in several parts of the country. The strained relationship led to riots which in their turn worsened public feelings. Thus, the vicious circle went on thoroughly vitiating the atmosphere.

Not even the resignation of the Congress ministries which occurred towards the end of October 1939 helped the situation. It was thought for the time that the removal of the objects of Muslim League attack would put an end to the League campaign. But subsequent events showed that far from producing this result the controversy increased in intensity. Out of office, the Congress appeared to have become more exposed to the League attack—at any rate, less in a position to defend itself against the League charges.

The withdrawal of the Congress ministries was hailed by the Muslim League as God-send and Mr. Jinnah announced a day of thanksgiving in celebration of the "deliverance" of the Muslims from the "tyranny" of the Congress. The "Deliverance Day" further accentuated the feeling against the Congress, and when the Congress stoutly denied the demand for a public inquiry into the League allegations.

Such was the virulence of the campaign against the Congress that all past efforts to bring about a reconciliation and working arrangement between the Congress and the League had perforce to be abandoned. The Muslim League under Mr. Jinnah struck a new path; and, arguing that the Muslim minorities could not be safe under a system of government in which the Hindu majority would be perpetual, the League proceeded to demand the establishment of separate autonomous Muslim States in Upper India functioning as an equal and respected partner with the Hindu autonomous State in a central government for the whole of geographical India. (For details see chapter headed Muslim Organisations.)

CONGRESS IN 1939-40.

The history of the Congress in the past twelve months can be broadly classified into three chapters. One of these is the internal affairs of the organisation; the second is the political development arising from the war; and the third is on communal problem inasmuch as it bore on politics. The last of these has already been referred to above and is dealt with in detail in the chapter on Muslim Organisations.

Dealing with the internal affairs, one has to mention the revolt of Mr. Bose which caused worry to the Congress leadership for a number of months, but eventually led to the restoration of Gandhian supremacy. Smarting under the short shrift administered to him at the Calcutta meeting of the All India Congress Committee in April 1939, Mr. Bose was evidently waiting for an opportunity to hit back. This was provided by two resolutions sponsored by the right wing and adopted by the All-India Congress Committee at Bombay in June. These resolutions in effect prohibited the inauguration of civil disobedience campaigns by Congressmen unless they secured the prior consent of their respective provincial Congress organisations.

They also discouraged irresponsible attacks on Congress ministries. Mr Bose organised protest meetings in many parts of the country on the ground that the resolutions infringed the right of Congressmen to resort to direct action when they could not get redress from the ministries. He was warned by the President of the Congress that the action contemplated by him constituted defiance of the resolution of the All-India Congress Committee and amounted to a revolt against the Congress. Mr Bose disregarded the warning and went ahead with his campaign of protest meetings. When called to book he persisted in defying the President and the higher Congress organisations and thus invited on himself the heavy hand of disciplinary action. In August he was debarred from holding any elective office of Congress for a stated period.

Meanwhile Mr. Bose had managed to consolidate his position in the Bengal Provincial Congress Committee where the majority of the members, presumably acting under his guidance, continued to disregard and defy the central executive. This went on for months until eventually the provincial Congress Committee was superseded.

Undeterred by these reverses and gathering round him a few extremists either from conviction or as a result of chagrin, Mr Bose kept up his attack on Mr. Gandhi and the right wing leadership. The frequent conversations which Mr. Gandhi carried on with the Viceroy since the outbreak of the war provided grist to Mr. Bose's mill. Mr. Bose ascribed these negotiations to a desire on the part of Mr. Gandhi to "compromise with the British Imperialism." He even held an anti-compromise conference as a side show to the annual session of the Indian National Congress at Ramgarh in March 1940. But his efforts appeared to have cut little ice.

For all practical purposes, one hears little of the ultra-extremists in the Congress. They have either lost their influence or have been imprisoned under the Defence of India Ordinance for speeches and actions held to be prejudicial to the peace of India, especially at the time of war.

During the summer and early autumn of 1939 the Congress was mostly engaged in internal reorganisation with a view to eliminating violence and corruption from within its ranks. The only event of major political importance was the Working Committee's decision in August to call upon all Congress members of the Central Legislature not to attend the sessions except insofar as it might be necessary to retain their seats thereon. It was a protest against the despatch of Indian troops abroad without the consent of Indian opinion and against the further extension of the life of the Central Assembly. The Working Committee also directed the provincial Ministries in no way to assist the war preparations of the British Government, and if it led to any hint to be prepared to resign or be removed from office.

These decisions were contrary to the advice to Mr. Gandhi who is reported to have suggested that the Congress should rest content with giving Britain moral support and do nothing else on the ground that being wedded to non-violence it was not open to the Congress to render active assistance in the shape of providing men, money and armaments for the active prosecution of an armed conflict. The Congress had to pay dearly for turning down Mr. Gandhi's advice, for it found itself involved in many a complication as the result thereof.

Addressing the Central Legislature early in September a few days after the declaration of war, the Viceroy announced that, in view of war preoccupations there was no choice but to hold in suspense the work in connection with the preparations for Federation although, His Excellency added, Federation still remained the objective of His Majesty's Government.

About the same time, Mr. Gandhi made a public statement in his individual capacity, immediately after an interview with the Viceroy. Therein he revealed that he had told His Excellency that his sympathies were with England and France from the purely humanitarian standpoint and that he could not contemplate the destruction of London. "I am not just now thinking of India's deliverance," he said, "it will come, but what will it be worth if England and France fall or if they come out victorious over Germany ruined and humbled?"

This statement created quite a favourable impression in India as well as in Britain but the Congress Working Committee which met about a week later chose to make India's support to Britain in war conditional on a declaration by Britain that the latter's policy towards this country involved the recognition of Indian independence. The resolution said inter alia :

"As a first step to disassociate themselves from the policy of the British Government, the Committee called upon the Congress members of the Central Legislative Assembly to refrain from attending the next session. Since then the British Government have declared India as a belligerent country, promulgated ordinances, passed the Government of India Act Amending Bill and taken other far-reaching measures which affect the Indian people vitally and circumscribe and limit the powers and activities of the Provincial Governments.

"This has been done without the consent of the Indian people, whose declared wishes in such matters have been deliberately ignored by the British Government. The Working Committee must take the gravest view of these developments.

"The Congress has repeatedly declared its entire disapproval of the ideology and practice of Fascism and Nazism and their glorification of war and violence and the suppression of the human spirit. It has condemned the aggression in which they have repeatedly indulged and their sweeping away of well-established principles and recognised standards of civilised behaviour. It has seen in Fascism and Nazism the intensification of the principle of Imperialism, against which the Indian people have struggled for many years. The Working Committee must, therefore, unhesitatingly condemn the latest aggression of the Nazi Government in Germany against Poland and sympathise with those who resist it.

"The Congress has further laid down that the issue of war and peace for India must be decided by the Indian people. No outside authority can impose this decision upon them, nor can the Indian people permit their resources to be exploited for Imperialist ends. Any imposed decision or attempt to use Indian resources for purposes not approved by them, will necessarily have to be opposed by them.

"If co-operation is desired in a worthy cause, this cannot be obtained by compulsion and imposition, and the Committee cannot agree to the carrying out by the Indian people of orders issued by an external authority. Co-operation must be between equals, by mutual consent, for a cause which both consider to be worthy.

"The people of India have in the recent past faced great risks and willingly, made great sacrifices to secure their own freedom and establish a free democratic State to India, and their sympathy is entirely on the side of democracy and freedom, but India cannot associate herself in a war said to be for democratic freedom when that very freedom is denied to her, and such limited freedom as she possesses is taken away from her.

"If the war is to defend the status quo of Imperialist possessions, Colonies, vested interests and privileges, then India can have nothing to do with it. If, however, the issue is democracy and a world order based on democracy, then India is intensely interested in it. The Committee are convinced that the interests of Indian democracy do not conflict with the interests of British democracy or of world democracy.

"But, there is an inherent and ineradicable conflict between democracy for India or elsewhere and Imperialism and Fascism. If Great Britain fights for the maintenance and extension of democracy, then she must necessarily end Imperialism in her own possessions, and establish full democracy in India. The Indian people must have the right of self-determination, the right to frame their own constitution through a Constituent Assembly, without external interference, and the right to guide their own policy.

"A free, democratic India will gladly associate herself with other free nations for mutual defence against aggression and for economic co-operation. We will work for the establishment of a real world order based on freedom and democracy, utilising the world's knowledge and resources for the progress and advancement of humanity.

"The crisis that has overtaken Europe is not of Europe only, but of humanity, and will not pass like other crises or wars, leaving the essential structure of the present-day world intact. It is likely to refashion the world for good. Politically, socially and economically, this crisis is the inevitable consequence of the social and political conflicts and contradictions which have grown alarmingly since the last Great War, and it will not be finally resolved till those conflicts and contradictions are removed and a new equilibrium is established. That equilibrium can only be based on the ending of the domination and exploitation of one country by another and the reorganisation of economic relations on a justice basis for the common good of all.

"India is the crux of the problem, for India has been the outstanding example of modern Imperialism, and no re-fashioning of the world can succeed which ignores this vital problem. With her vast resources she must play an important part in any scheme of world reorganisation.

"The Working Committee have noted that many Rulers of Indian States have offered their services and resources and expressed their desire to support the cause of democracy in Europe. If they must make their profession in favour of democracy abroad, the Committee would suggest that their first concern should be the introduction of democracy within their own States, in which, today, undiluted autocracy reigns.

"The British Government in India are more responsible for this autocracy than even the Rulers themselves, as has been made painfully evident during the past year. This policy is the very negation of democracy and of the new world order for which Great Britain claims to be fighting in Europe. As they (the Working Committee) view past events in Europe, Africa and Asia, and, more particularly, past and present occurrences in India, they fail to find any attempt to advance the cause of democracy or self-determination, or any evidence that the present war declarations of the British Government are being, or are going to be, acted upon.

"The true measure of democracy is the ending of Imperialism and Fascism alike, and the aggression that has accompanied them in the past and the present. Only on that basis can a new order be built up. In the struggle for that new world order the Committee are eager and desirous to help in every way, but the Committee cannot associate themselves or offer any co-operation in a war which is conducted on Imperialist lines, and which is meant to consolidate Imperialism in India and elsewhere.

"In view, however, of the gravity of the occasion, the Committee desire to take no final decision at this stage so as to allow for the full elucidation of the issues at stake, the real objectives aimed at and the position of India in the present and in the future. But the decision cannot long be delayed as India is being committed from day to day to a policy to which she is not a party, and of which she disapproves.

"The Working Committee, therefore, invite the British Government to declare in unequivocal terms what their war aims are in regard to democracy and Imperialism and the new order that is envisaged, in particular, how these aims are going to apply to India and to be given effect to in the present. Do they include the elimination of Imperialism and the treatment of India as a free nation whose policy will be guided in accordance with the wishes of her people?

"A clear declaration about the future, pledging the Government to the ending of Imperialism and Fascism alike, will be welcomed by the people of all countries, but it is far more important to give immediate effect to it to the largest possible extent, for only this will convince the people that the declaration is meant to be honoured. The real test of any declaration is its application in the present, for it is the present that will govern action today and give shape to the future.

"The Working Committee wish to declare that the Indian people have no quarrel with the German people or the Japanese people or any other people, but they have a deep-rooted quarrel with systems which deny freedom and are based on violence and aggression. They do not look forward to a victory of one people over another or to a dictated peace, but to a victory of real democracy for all the people of all countries and a world freed from the nightmare of violence and Imperialist oppression."

Although it did not fully represent Mr. Gandhi's views embodied in his statement referred to earlier, he approved of the Working Committee's resolution. He revealed that he was alone in thinking that whatever support was to be given to the British should be given unconditionally. "This could only be done on a purely non-violent basis. It could not take the purely non-violent attitude. It felt that the nation had not unified the non-violent spirit requisite for the possession of the strength which disdains to take advantage of the difficulty of the opponent. But in stating the reasons for its conclusion the Committee desired to show the greatest consideration for the English."

In support of the resolution, Mr. Gandhi said that it compelled India "to think not merely for her own freedom but of the freedom of all the exploited nations of the world." He added: "Recognition of India, and for that matter of all those who are under the British Crown, as free and independent nations seems to be the natural corollary of British professions about democracy. If the war means anything less, the co-operation of dependent nations can never be honestly voluntary, unless it were based on non-violence."

"All that is required is a mental revolution on the part of British statesmen. To put it still more plainly, all that is required is honest action to implement the declaration of faith in democracy made on the eve of the war, and still being repeated from British platforms. Will Britain have an unwilling India dragged into the war or a willing ally co-operating with her in the prosecution of a defence of true democracy? The Congress support will mean the greatest moral asset in favour of England and France. For the Congress has no soldiers to offer. The Congress fights not with violent but with non-violent means, however imperfect, however crude the non-violence may be."

Commenting on the Working Committee's resolution, Lord Zetland said that, while he was ready to admit that it might be natural for the Congress leaders to take the present occasion to emphasise their claims, he could not help expressing the feeling that it was somewhat unfortunate that they should have chosen that time to reassert their claims.

To this Mr. Gandhi retorted by saying that if the British were fighting for the freedom of all then their representatives had to state that the freedom of India was necessarily included in the war aims. "The content of such freedom can only be decided by Indians and by them alone. Surely it is wrong for Lord Zetland to complain, as he does, that the Congress should at this juncture, when Britain is engaged in a life and death struggle, ask for a clear declaration of British intentions. I suggest that the Congress has done nothing strange or less than honourable in asking for such a declaration. Only a free India's help is of value. And the Congress has every right to know that it can go to the people and tell that at the end of the war India's status as an independent country is as much assured as that of Great Britain. As a friend of the British, I, therefore, appeal to English statesmen that they will forget the old language of Imperialists and open a new chapter for those who have been held under Imperial bondage."

Early in October, the Viceroy held consultations with leaders of the Congress, the League and a number of other political and communal organisations in the country. It was at first expected that something tangible would emerge from these negotiations but eventually it proved to be a miniature Round Table Conference, with this difference that the Indian representatives were not present at one and the same time. These negotiations formed the basis of a statement of policy made by the Viceroy in the middle of October.

But before that the All-India Congress Committee met at Wardha and passed the following resolution:—

"The declaration of war in Europe has created an international situation of the gravest import to the world and to India, and the A.I.C.C., charged with the heavy responsibility of guiding the people of India in this moment of world crisis, has sought guidance from the principles and declarations of the Congress in considering this grave situation. The Congress has been guided throughout by its objective of achieving the independence of the Indian people and the establishment of a free democratic State in India in which the rights and interests of all minorities are preserved and safeguarded."

"The means that it has adopted in its struggles and activities have been peaceful and legitimate, and it has looked upon war and violence with horror and as opposed to progress and civilisation. In particular, the Congress has declared itself opposed to all Imperialist wars and to the domination of one country over another. In spite of the repeated declarations of the Congress in regard to war, the British Government have declared India a belligerent country without the consent of the Indian people and various far-reaching measures have been hurried through the legislatures, vitally affecting them and encroaching and limiting the powers of the provincial Governments."

"The A. I. C. C., however, does not wish to take any decision precipitately and without giving every opportunity for the war and peace aims of the British Government to be clarified, with particular reference to India."

"The Committee approves of and endorses the statement issued by the Working Committee on September 14, 1939, on the war crisis and repeats the invitation contained therein to the British Government to state their war aims and peace aims. While the Committee condemns Fascism and Nazi aggression, it is convinced that peace and freedom can only be established and preserved by an extension of democracy to all colonial countries and by the application of the principle of self-determination to them so as to eliminate Imperialist control. In particular, India must be declared an independent nation and at present application must be given to this status to the largest possible extent.

"The A. I. C. C. earnestly trusts that this declaration will be made by the British Government in any statement that it may make in regard to its war and peace aims.

"The Committee desires to declare afresh that Indian freedom must be based on democracy and unity and the full recognition and protection of the rights of all minorities, to which the Congress has always pledged itself."

Explaining the Congress attitude to the minorities problem, Mr. Gandhi wrote: "Britain has hitherto held India by producing before the world Indians who want Britain to remain in India. Whether the aim varies in defence of holding India under subjection, or whether she should now recognise the mistake and leave India to decide upon the method of her own government. Those who raise the cry of minority in danger have nothing to fear from the so-called majority which is merely a paper majority and which in any event is ineffective because it is weak in the military sense. Paradoxical as it may appear, it is literally true that the so-called minorities' fear has some bottom only so long as the weak majority has the backing of the British bayonets to enable it to play at democracy. But the British power will, so long as it so chooses, successfully play one against the other, calling the parties by whatever names it pleases."

Then came the important statement by the Viceroy on British intentions towards India. It was a lengthy document and said: "Since the outbreak of the war and, more particularly, during the last four weeks I have been in the closest touch with the leaders of political opinion in British India and with representatives of the Princely order.

"I have had the advantage of a full and frank discussion with no fewer than 52 people—with Mr. Gandhi, with the President and members of the Congress Working Committee, with Mr. Jinnah and with representative members of the Muslim League organisation, with the Chancellor of the Chamber of Princes, and with a great variety of persons prominent in the political life of British India.

"As was only to be expected, conversations with representatives of so many different points of view revealed marked differences of outlook, markedly different demands, and markedly different solutions for the problems that lie before us. Again, and that too was what might have been expected at a time such as the present, reservations or demands for special protection on one side have tended to be balanced by proposals for still more marked constitutional changes on another.

"The essential matters on which a clarification of the position is desired are:—

"First, what are the objectives of His Majesty's Government in the war? To what extent are they of such a character that India with her long history and great traditions can, with a clear conscience, associate herself with them?

"Second, what is the future that is contemplated in the constitutional sphere for the Indian continent? What are the intentions of His Majesty's Government? Is it possible to define those intentions more precisely and in such a manner as to leave the world in no doubt as to the ultimate status envisaged for India as far as the British Commonwealth is concerned?

"Third, in what way can the desire of India and of Indian public opinion for a closer association, and an effective association, with the prosecution of the war be satisfied?

"I do not propose to touch on the question of our objectives for India. That is a matter which I will deal with separately in answering the second question which I have mentioned above. His Majesty's Government have not themselves yet defined with any ultimate precision their detailed objectives in the prosecution of the war. It is obvious that such a definition can come only at a later stage in the campaign, and that when it does come, it cannot be a statement of the aims of any single ally. We are fighting to resist aggression whether directed against ourselves or others. Our general aims have been stated by the Prime Minister within the last few days as follows:— 'We are seeking no material advantage for ourselves. We are not aiming only at victory, but looking beyond it to laying the foundation of a better international system which will mean that war is not to be the inevitable lot of each succeeding generation. We, like all the peoples of Europe, long for peace, but it must be a real and settled peace, not an uneasy truce interrupted by constant alarms and threats.' This statement, I think, clearly establishes the nature of the cause for which we are fighting, and justifies, if justification is needed, the extension by India of her moral support and her goodwill to the prosecution of that cause.

"What are the intentions and aims of His Majesty's Government in relation to India? I cannot do better in reply to that question than to refer to the statement made on behalf of His Majesty's Government, and with their full authority, by the late Secretary of State for India in the House of Commons on the 6th February, 1935. That statement makes the position clear beyond a shadow of doubt. It refers to the pledge given in the Preamble of the Act of 1919, and it makes it clear that it was no part of the plan of His Majesty's Government to repeal that pledge. It confirms equally the interpretation placed in 1929 by Lord Irwin as Viceroy, again on the authority of the Government of the day, on that Preamble, that 'the natural issue of India's progress as there contemplated is the attainment of Dominion Status.' I need not dilate on the words of that statement. They are clear and positive. They are enshrined in the Parliamentary record. They stand as a definite and categorical exposition of the policy of His Majesty's Government to-day, and of their intentions to-day in this end—the future constitutional development and position of India. I would add only that the Instrument of Instructions issued to me as Governor-General by His Majesty the King-Emperor in May 1937 lays upon me as Governor-General a direction so to exercise the trust which His Majesty has reposed in me 'that the partnership between India and the United Kingdom within our Empire may be furthered to the end that India may attain its due place among our Dominions'."

The following is the relevant portion of Sir Samuel Hoare's statement made in the House of Commons on February 6, 1935:—

"The position of the Government is this. They stand firmly by the pledge contained in 1919 Preamble (which it is not part of their plan to repeal) and by the Interpretation put by the Viceroy in 1929 on the authority of the Government of the day on that Preamble that 'the natural issue of India's progress as there contemplated is the attainment of Dominion Status'. The declaration of 1929 was made to remove doubts which had been felt as to the meaning of the Preamble of 1919. There is, therefore, no need to enshrine in an Act words and phrases which would add nothing new to the declaration in the Preamble. In saying that we stand by our pledges I include, of course, not only pledges given to British India and to Burma as part of British India, but also our engagements with the Indian States."

"His Majesty's Government recognise that when the time comes to resume consideration of the plan for the future Federal Government of India, and of the plan destined to give effect to the assurances given in Parliament by the late Secretary of State, to which I have just referred, it will be necessary to reconsider in the light of the then circumstances to what extent the details of the plan embodied in the Act of 1935 remain appropriate. And I am authorised now by His Majesty's Government to say that at the end of the war they will be very willing to enter into consultation with representatives of the several communities, parties, and interests in India, and with the Indian Princes, with a view to securing their aid and co-operation in the framing of such modifications as may seem desirable.

"The scheme of government embodied in the Act of 1935 was designed as an essential stage in that process. But I have made clear in what I have just said that His Majesty's Government will, at the end of the war, be prepared to regard the scheme of the Act as open to modification in the light of Indian views. And I would make it clear, too, that it will be their object, as at all times in the past it has been, to spare no pains to further agreement by any means in their power in the hope of contributing to the ordered and harmonious progress of India towards her goal.

"Let me in that connection add that in the conversations I have had representatives of the minorities have urged most strongly on me the necessity of a clear assurance that full weight would be given to their views and to their interests in any modifications that may be contemplated. On that I need say no more than that over more than a decade at the three Round Table Conferences, and at the Joint Select Committee, His Majesty's Government consulted with and had the assistance or the advice of representatives of all parties and all interests in this country. It is unthinkable that we should now proceed to plan afresh or to modify in any respect any important part of India's future constitution without again taking counsel with those who have in the recent past been so closely associated in a like task with His Majesty's Government and with Parliament.

"I am convinced that having regard to the extent of agreement which in fact exists in the constitutional field and on this most difficult and important question of the nature of the arrangements to be made for expediting and facilitating the attainment by India of her full status, there is nothing to be gained by phrases which, widely and generally expressed, contemplate a state of thing which is unlikely to stand at the present point of political development the test of practical application or to result in that united effort by all parties and all communities in India on the basis of which alone India can hope to go forward as one and to occupy the place to which her history and her destinies entitle her. I would ask that these words of caution be not taken as indicating any lack of sympathy on the part of His Majesty's Government for the aspirations of India, or any indifference to the pace of her advance; and I would repeat that His Majesty's Government are, but concerned to use their best endeavours, now as in the past to bring about that measure of agreement and understanding between all parties and all interests in this country which is so essential a condition of progress towards India's goal.

"In the light of my conversations and of the views (by no means always in accord) of representatives of the great parties and of the Princes, I am of opinion that the right solution would be the establishment of a consultative group, representative of all major political parties in British India and of the Indian Princes, over which the Governor-General would himself preside, which would be summoned at his invitation, and which would have as its object the association of public opinion in India with the conduct of the war and with questions relating to war activities.

"This group, for practical reasons, would inevitably be limited in size. But His Majesty's Government contemplate that it should be fully representative, and in particular that its personnel should be drawn by the Governor-General from panels prepared by the various major political parties, from which a selection of individuals to attend meetings of the group would be made by the Governor-General. I hope in the very near future to enter into consultation with political leaders and with the Princes on this question. I have no doubt whatever that an arrangement of this nature will most materially contribute to associating the Indian States and British India with the steps which are being taken for the prosecution of the war and with the arrangements that are being made in that connection.

"And I am confident, too, that in an association of this nature of representatives of all parties and all interests, there lies the germ of that fuller and broader association of all points of view in this country which contain in it the seeds of such advantage for the future of India as a whole.

"Even if on certain points I have not, to my knowledge, been able to give assurances so comprehensive as those which would, I know, have been welcomed in certain political quarters in India, I would urge insistently that this is not a moment at which to risk the splitting of the unity of India on the rock of particular phrases, and I would press that we should continue to aim at the unity of India even if differences of greater or less significance continue to exist."

The offer made by the Viceroy was rejected out of hand by Mr. Gandhi who described the Viceregal declaration as profoundly disappointing. "It would have been better if the British Government had declined to make any declaration whatsoever. The long statement made by the Viceroy simply shows that the old policy of divide and rule is to continue. So far as I can see, the Congress will be no party to it, nor can the India of the Congress conception be a partner with Britain in her war with Herr Hitler. The declaration shows clearly that there is to be no democracy in India if Britain can prevent it. Another Round Table Conference is promised at the end of the war. Like its predecessor, it is bound to fail. The Congress asked for bread and it has got a stone. What the future has in store for India I dare not foretell. I do not blame the Viceroy or the leaders of Britain for the unfortunate result. The Congress will have to go into the wilderness again before it becomes strong and pure enough to reach its objective. I have no doubt that Congressmen will await the Working Committee's decision."

Within a week the Congress Working Committee met again and generally endorsed the views expressed by Mr. Gandhi above. It said: "In the circumstances, the Working Committee cannot possibly give any support to Great Britain, for it would amount to an endorsement of the Imperialist policy which the Congress has always sought to end. As a first step in this direction, the Committee calls upon the Congress ministries to tender their resignations."

This ended two and a half years of parliamentary activity by an organisation which for more than fifty years had remained in the opposition.

Least it should be thought that the Congress had closed its doors to negotiations. Mr. Gandhi explained that the Congress had left the door open to Britain "to mend the mistake." He added: "Further action by the Congress will wholly depend upon Britain's handling of the crisis. The Congress has demanded no constitutional change during the war. Its demand is for a declaration that Britain's war aims necessarily include India's independence according to the charter framed by her elected representatives after war. This declaration should be acted up to during war to the utmost extent possible. The minorities question is a bogey. Not that it does not exist, but its proper solution can only come out of the proposed Constituent Assembly. The burden of solving the tangle rests not on Britain but on the Constituent Assembly. According to Indian opinion, the Hindu-Muslim question at the direct product of British rule. The least the Congress could do was to withdraw the Congress ministers from the provincial administration."

Acting on the directions of the Congress Working Committee the legislatures in the provinces administered by the Congress passed resolutions regretting that the British Government had made India a participant in the war without the consent of the people of India and had further "in complete disregard of Indian opinion," passed laws and adopted measures "curtailing the powers and activities of the Provincial Governments." The resolution recommended to the Provincial Governments to convey to the Government of India and to the British Government that "in consonance with the avowed aims of the present war, it is essential in order to secure the co-operation of the Indian people that the principles of democracy be applied to India and her policy be guided by her people, and that India should be regarded as an independent nation entitled to frame her own constitution providing, among other things, adequate safeguards for the protection of the rights and liberty of the members of all minority communities in India, and further that suitable action should be taken insofar as it is possible in the immediate present to give effect to that principle in regard to the present governance of India, giving at the same time a voice to important minorities in the machinery that may be devised for the purpose."

The legislatures of the Punjab and Bengal which are not under Congress rule however, voiced the support of those provinces to the Allied cause in the war. The resolution in these two provincial legislatures demanded that it should forthwith be made absolutely clear that "the constitution of India shall be examined de novo at the end of the war with a view to the immediate attainment of the objective of, Dominion Status with effective protection of the due rights of the minorities and other sections and in consultation with, and agreement of, all parties concerned."

After the passage of the resolutions quoted above the various ministries in the Congress governed provinces tendered their resignations. They were accepted in the first week of November when the Governors of those provinces suspended the Constitution and assumed the whole governmental power under section 93 of the Government of India Act.

Yet another attempt was made early in November to bring about an understanding between the Congress and the British Government, but it led to nothing as the Viceroy's offer respecting representation in the Executive Council at the Centre, if a basis of agreement could be reached between the Congress and the League in the provincial field, was rejected by the Congress.

Lord Linlithgow urged the wisdom of reaching an understanding on general lines for the purposes of joint co-operation in the existing organisation of the Central Government for the duration of the war, pending later re-examination of the whole constitutional issue.

To this Dr. Rajendra Prasad, as President of the Indian National Congress and Mr. Jinnah, as President of the All-India Muslim League, found themselves unable to do other than send independent replies.

On behalf of the Congress the reply was based on the stand-point that the demand for a declaration affirming India's right to a self-determined constitution by means of a constituent assembly, for which an agreed formula for minority representation would be found, was the main point at issue. This claim, it was asserted, had nothing to do with the "domestic" communal difficulty and its satisfaction was advanced as an essential preliminary to any other considerations.

From the other angle, Mr. Jinnah has quietly contented himself with pointing out that his discussions with the Congress merely confirmed their disinclination to discuss the questions propounded by the Viceroy until and unless the demand embodied in the Congress resolution regarding war aims is conceded.

Lord Linlithgow's earnest attempt to reach a political understanding thus ended in a deadlock.

The Congress spokesmen insisted on pressing their demand for a declaration from His Majesty's Government of India's independent right to produce a self-governing constitution by a democratic process. This in itself was unacceptable to Mr. Jinnah because the constituent assembly machinery had been unequivocally rejected by the Muslim League Working Committee.

In the result independent replies on behalf of the two parties were submitted to the Viceroy.

In a letter addressed jointly to the Congress and the Muslim League leaders, the Viceroy suggested that "given the great importance of ensuring harmonious working at the Centre, you should enter upon discussions between yourselves with a view to discovering whether you could reach a basis of agreement between yourselves in the provincial field, consequent on which you could let me have proposals which would result in representatives of . . . immediately participating . . . in my judgment, it ought not to be necessary absolutely to resolve every detail of such differences as may exist in the provinces. What is required is a degree of agreement in respect of the provinces, such as to make it possible for my visitors, and the organisations which they represented, to put forward a scheme which could be considered for the Centre."

By way of specific proposals, His Excellency said: "First, that one would hope that it might be found practicable to include also one of possibly more representatives of other important groups, and that that was a question on which I should value your advice when we came to grapple with the details.

Secondly, that the arrangement which I invited you to consider for the Centre would be an ad hoc arrangement for the period of the war, and quite distinct from the much wider question of constitutional reform at the end of the war.

Thirdly, that the position of any one appointed to my Executive Council as a member of a political party would be identical, in privileges and in obligations, with that of the existing members of my Council.

And, fourthly, that the arrangement would be within the general scheme of the existing law. It would be admittedly and inevitably a make-shift arrangement for the duration of the campaign. What is required now, if we could get a workable scheme together, is to put it into operation, with as little delay as possible, pending the more general review of the whole constitutional position which His Majesty's Government have expressed their readiness to undertake after the conclusion of hostilities."

In reply, the Congress President said that both Mr. Gaudhi and he "missed at the interview any reference to the main and moral issue raised by the Congress about clarification of war aims," without which it was impossible for the Congress to consider any subsidiary proposal. "Subsequent statements made on behalf of the British Government in Parliament have not made any essential difference to the policy outlined in the Viceregal statement. I am afraid it is quite impossible for us to accept this policy or to consider any steps to further co-operation unless the policy of the British Government is made clear in a declaration on the lines suggested by the Congress.

"It has pained us to find the communal question being dragged in in this connection. It has clouded the main issue. It has been repeatedly said on behalf of the Congress that it is our earnest desire to settle all points of communal controversy by agreement, and we propose to continue our efforts to this end. But I would point out that this question does not in any respect come in the way of a declaration of Indian freedom as suggested above.

"Such a declaration applies to the whole of India and not to any particular community, and the Constituent Assembly which will frame India's constitution, will be formed on the widest possible basis of franchise and by agreement in regard to communal representation. We are . . . and that there must be full protection of . . . rights and interests, and this protection . . . be by agreement between the parties concerned.

"The British Government, taking or sharing the burden has in our opinion, made a settlement of the question much more difficult than it should have been. It should allay all real anxiety on the part of the British Government when the Congress declares that it contemplates no constitution which does not carry with it the protection of real minorities to their satisfaction.

"It seems to us that a clear declaration of the kind suggested is an essential preliminary to any further consideration of the matter. I should like to add that recent developments in the European war have made it all the more necessary for a clear enunciation of war aims. If a satisfactory declaration is made, a discussion of the proposal made by Your Excellency will be appropriate and useful and we shall gladly discuss it with you."

Mr. Jinnah's reply pointed out that the Congress leaders could not discuss any questions relating to the provincial field or the Centre until the British Government had complied with their demand for a declaration and that therefore the Viceroy's proposals were not considered by them.

Later in November the Working Committee reiterated its earlier resolutions and approved of the Congress President's reply to the Viceroy.

The Muslim League's campaign against the Congress had by now increased in vigour and Mr. Jinnah announced the observance of a "Deliverance Day" to celebrate the resignation of the Congress Ministries.

About this time, Lord Zetland made a statement in Parliament emphasising His Majesty's Government's determination to pay due heed to the demands and rights of the Muslim and other minorities.

In answer to this the Congress Working Committee observed that "Lord Zetland's reference to the communal question merely clouds the issue and takes the public mind off the central theme that the British have failed to define their war aims especially with regard to India's freedom. In the opinion of the Working Committee, the communal question will never be satisfactorily solved so long as the different parties are to look to a third party, through whose favour they expect to gain special privileges even though it may be at the expense of the nation.

The rule of a foreign power over a people involves a division among the elements composing it. The Congress has never concealed from itself the necessity of uniting the various divisions. It is one organisation which, in order to maintain its national character, has consistently tried, not always without success, to bring about unity. The Working Committee is convinced that lasting unity will only come when foreign rule is completely withdrawn. The Working Committee is aware that the independence of India cannot be maintained if there are warring elements within the country. The Committee is, therefore, entitled to read in the British Government raising the communal question as reluctance to part with power.

"The constituent assembly as proposed by the Congress is the only way to attain a final settlement of the communal question. The proposal contemplates the fullest representation of the minorities, with separate electorates where necessary. It has already been made clear on behalf of the Congress that minority rights will be protected to the satisfaction of the minorities concerned, differences, if any, being referred to an impartial tribunal.

"Congressmen by now realise that independence is not to be won without very hard work. Since the Congress is pledged to non-violence, the final sanction behind it is civil resistance, which is but a part of satyagraha. Satyagraha means good-will to all, especially towards opponents. Therefore, it is the duty of individual Congressmen to promote and seek good-will. Success of the programme of khaddar, as an accepted symbol of non-violence, harmony and economic independence, is indispensable. The Working Committee, therefore, hopes that all Congress organisations will, by the increased prosecution of the constructive programme prove themselves fit to take up the call, when it comes."

The next stage in the political negotiations was a speech made by the Viceroy in January 1940 declaring that Dominion Status was the goal of British policy in India, to be attained with the minimum delay after the conclusion of the war. His Excellency regretted that force of circumstances had compelled him to suspend the preparations for the inauguration of Federation and said: "I deeply regret myself that that should have been necessary, since whatever criticisms, on one ground or another, have been levelled against the scheme of Federation in the Act, could it but have been brought into operation, it would have provided us with the solution of almost all the problems that confront us today—the presence of Ministers at the Centre; the association of the Indian States (a point of such vital importance to British India) in a common Government; the representation of all minorities on the lines elaborated after a full consideration of the claims and proposals of the minorities themselves, and the unity of India."

Outlining the intentions of His Majesty's Government towards India, the Viceroy said: "Their objective for India is full Dominion Status—Dominion Status, too, of the Statute of Westminster variety, that, so far as the intermediate period is concerned (and it is their desire to make that intermediate period the shortest practicable), they are ready to consider the reopening of the scheme of the Act of 1935 so soon as practicable after the war with the aid of Indian opinion; that they are prepared in the meantime, subject to such local adjustments between the leaders of the great communities as may be necessary, to ensure harmonious working, and as an immediate earnest of their intention, to expand the Executive Council of the Governor-General by the inclusion of a small number of political leaders; and that they are ready and anxious to give all the help they can to overcome the difficulties that confront us and that confront India today."

His Excellency continued: "We are, after all, dealing not with one political party only, but with many. Nor must we forget the essential necessity, in the interests of Indian unity, of the inclusion of the Indian States in any constitutional scheme. There are the insistent claims of the minorities. I need refer only to two of them—the great Muslim minority and the scheduled castes. There are the guarantees that have been given to the minorities in the past—the fact that their position must be safeguarded, and that those guarantees must be honoured.

The position of the Viceroy and of His Majesty's Government, is difficult, faced as they are with strong and conflicting claims advanced by bodies and interests to whose views the utmost attention must be paid, and whose position must receive the fullest consideration. Justice must be done as between the various parties, and His Majesty's Government are determined to see justice done.

"But I would ask my friends in the various parties to consider whether they cannot get together and reach some agreement between themselves which would facilitate my task, and the task of His Majesty's Government, in dealing with this vital question of Indian constitutional progress; and I would venture again to emphasise the case for compromise—the case for avoiding too rigid an approach to problems such as those with which we are dealing today. As to the objective, there is no dispute. I am ready to consider any practical suggestion that has general support, and I am ready, when the time comes, to give every help that I personally can. His Majesty's Government are not blind—nor can we be blind here—to the practical difficulties involved in moving at one step from the existing constitutional position into that constitutional position which is represented by Dominion Status. But here again I can assure you that their concern and mine is to spare no effort to reduce to the minimum the interval between the existing state of things and the achievement of Dominion Status.

"The offer is there. The responsibility that falls on the great political parties and their leaders is a heavy one, and one of which they are, I know, fully conscious. They have helped me in the past. I ask today that they will help me again and help India, and I ask for their co-operation and their assistance in terminating at as early a date as possible a state of things which all who have faith in the virtue of constitutional progress must deplore; a state of things which every lover of India—everyone who is concerned to advance her interest—must feel today to be a bitter disappointment."

Immediately after this the Viceroy made it clear in a speech at Baroda that the fact that the federal preparations had been suspended did not for a moment mean that His Majesty's Government had in any way modified their own view as to the necessity for securing Indian unity "a unity which can only be complete if in the constitutional arrangements of the future the historic Indian States, with their great and special traditions, take the place which we have always looked forward to seeing them occupy."

On the basis of the Bombay speech quoted above, Mr. Gandhi again met the Viceroy, but the interview led to nothing, as at earlier meetings. In the words of an agreed communiqué, "His Excellency set out in some detail the intention and the proposals of His Majesty's Government. He emphasised, in the first place, their earnest desire that India should attain Dominion Status at the earliest possible moment and to facilitate the achievement of that status by all means in their power. He drew attention to the complexity and difficulty of certain of the issues that called for disposal in that connection. In particular the issue of defence in a Dominion position.

"He made it clear that His Majesty's Government were only too ready to examine the whole of the field in consultation with representatives of all particulars and interests in India when the time came. He made clear also the anxiety of His Majesty's Government to shorten the transition period and to bridge it as effectively as possible.

"His Excellency drew attention to the fact that, as he recently repeated at Baroda, the Federal scheme of the Act, while at present in suspense afforded the swiftest stepping stone to Dominion Status and that its adoption, with the consent of all concerned, would facilitate the solution of many of the problems that had to be faced in that connection.

"He added that the offer put forward by him in November last of an expansion of the Governor-General's Executive Council on the lines and on the basis then indicated remained open and that His Majesty's Government were prepared to give immediate effect to that offer. Subject to the consent of the parties affected, His Majesty's Government would be prepared also to reopen the Federal scheme so as to expedite the achievement of Dominion Status and to facilitate the settlement after the war of the issues to which it gave rise.

"Mr. Gandhi expressed appreciation of the spirit in which these proposals were put forward, but made it clear that they did not, in his view, at this stage meet the full demand of the Congress Party. He suggested, and the Viceroy agreed, that in the circumstances it would be preferable to defer for the present further discussions with the object of a solution of the difficulties which had arisen."

In a statement on the failure of this latest effort, Mr. Gandhi said he saw no prospect of a peaceful and honourable settlement unless Britain accepted the position that the time had come when India must be allowed to determine her own constitution and status.

"There exists a deep gulf," he said, between the position indicated in the Viceroy's offer, which contemplates final determination of India's destiny by the British Government, and the position taken up by the Congress."

Claiming to speak on behalf of the dumb millions, not having had a mandate from the Congress, Mr. Gandhi declares that he wants an honourable settlement without even a non-violent fight.

He expounded his views on the crucial questions of defence, minorities, Princes and European interests, and held that once India's claim was recognised those issues would be automatically dissolved.

The Congress Ministries, Mr. Gandhi said would remain out of office till the main Congress demand was settled.

Answering the question whether India would reach her goal without a struggle Mr. Gandhi said, "That is the thing for which we should patiently wait and watch, but I am sure that if Congressmen solidly support me we would not require another struggle. I do not want to fight for the sake of a fight. I am not spoiling for a fight. I will make endeavours to avoid it if we could free India without it." Mr. Gandhi asked Congressmen not to be disappointed with the failure of the negotiations with the Viceroy. He appealed to them to carry out in the letter and in the spirit the constructive programme of the Congress.

Great emphasis was laid by Mr. Gandhi on the constructive programme which included the spreading of hand-spinning and other village industries, the removal of untouchability and efforts to attain Hindu-Muslim unity without being satisfied on all of which Mr. Gandhi refused to start civil disobedience. Steps were taken by local Congressmen to fulfil these conditions and, at the time of writing, Congress India is vigorously "preparing for a fight"; but Mr. Gandhi continues to express his reluctance to launch a campaign if only because it might lead to communal rioting in face of prevalent Muslim opinion that any effort to secure further political power for India as a whole could not but lead to the domination of the Hindu community over the Muslims.

RAMGARH CONGRESS, 1940.

The annual session of the Congress was held at Ramgarh in April 1940. Maulana Abul Kalam Azad, who presided, said: "When once a step is taken, there is no stopping. To cry halt is to go back, and we refuse to go back. We can only, therefore, go forward. I am sure that the voice of every one of you joins me when I proclaim that we must, and will, go forward." He continued: "The straight and simple question is of India's right; whether she is entitled to determine her own fate or not. On the answer to this question depend the answers to all other questions of the day." He then referred to the communal question, and said that the Congress always meant to solve the problem on the basis of two principles, namely, (1) that whatever constitution was adopted for India there must be the fullest guarantees in it for the rights and interests of minorities, (2) that the minorities should judge for themselves what safeguards were necessary for the protection of their rights and interests.

He added: "I have been in the Congress for the last nineteen years. During the whole of this period there is not a single important decision of the Congress in the shaping of which I have not had the honour to participate. I assert that during these last nineteen years not for a single day the Congress has thought of solving this problem in any way other than the way I have stated above."

"Indian Muslims," he said, "have to answer one basic question: 'Do we Indian Muslims view the free India of the future with suspicion and distrust or with courage and confidence? If we view it with fear and suspicion then undoubtedly we have to follow a different path.... We are then forced to tolerate the existence of a third power.... But if we are convinced that for us fear and doubt have no place, and that we must view the future with courage and confidence in ourselves, then our course of action becomes absolutely clear." I am a Muslim and proud of that fact. Islam's splendid traditions of thirteen hundred years are my inheritance.... It is my duty to protect them." At the same time, he said: "I am proud of being an Indian. I am a part of the indivisible unity that is Indian nationality.... I am an essential element which has gone to build India, I can never surrender this claim."

Concluding, he said: "The time of our trial is upon us. We have already focussed the world's attention. Let us endeavour to prove ourselves worthy."

There was only one resolution before the session, and it was adopted nem con. It ran:—

"This Congress, having considered the grave and critical situation resulting from the war in Europe and British policy in regard to it approves of and endorses the resolutions passed and the action taken on the war situation by the A.I.C.C. and Working Committee. The Congress considers the declaration by the British Government of India as a belligerent country, without any reference to the people of India, and the exploitation of India's resources in this war, as an affront to them, which no self-respecting and freedom-loving people can accept or tolerate. The recent pronouncements made on behalf of the British Government in regard to India demonstrate that Great Britain is carrying on the war fundamentally for Imperialist ends and for the reservation and strengthening of her Empire, which is based on the exploitation of the people of India, as well as of other Asiatic and African countries. Under these circumstances, it is clear that the Congress cannot in any way, directly or indirectly, be party to the war, which means continuance and perpetuation of this exploitation. The Congress, therefore, strongly disapproves of Indian troops being made to fight for Great Britain and of the drain from India of men and material for the purpose of the war. Neither the recruiting nor the money raised in India can be considered to be voluntary contributions from India. Congressmen, and those under the Congress influence, cannot help in the prosecution of the war with men, money or material."

"The Congress hereby declares again that nothing short of complete independence can be accepted by the people of India. Indian freedom cannot exist within the orbit of Imperialism and Dominion Status or any other status within the Imperial structure is wholly inapplicable to India, is not in keeping with the dignity of a great nation and would bind India in many ways to British politics and economic structure. The people of India alone can properly shape their own constitution and determine their relations to the other countries of the world, through a Constituent Assembly elected on the basis of adult suffrage."

The Congress is further of opinion that while it will always be ready, as it ever has been, to make every effort to secure communal harmony no permanent solution is possible except through a Constituent Assembly, where the rights of all recognised minorities will be fully protected by agreement, as far as possible, between the elected representatives of various majority and minority groups or by arbitration if agreement is not reached on any point. Any alternative will lack finality. India's constitution must be based on independence, democracy and national unity, and the Congress repudiates attempts to divide India or to split up her nationhood. The Congress has always aimed at a constitution where the fullest freedom and opportunities of development are guaranteed to the group and the individual, and social injustice yields place to a juster social order.

"The Congress cannot admit the right of the rulers of Indian States, or of foreign vested interests to come in the way of Indian freedom. Sovereignty in India must rest with the people, whether in the States or the provinces, and all other interests must be subordinated to their vital interests. The Congress holds that the difficulty raised in regard to the States is of British creation and it will not be satisfactorily solved unless the declaration of the freedom of India from foreign rule is unequivocally made. Foreign interests if they are not in conflict with the interests of the Indian people, will be protected.

"The Congress withdrew the Ministries from the provinces where the Congress had a majority in order to dissociate India from the war and to enforce the Congress determination to free India from foreign domination. This preliminary step must naturally be followed by Civil Disobedience, to which the Congress will unhesitatingly resort as soon as the Congress organisation is considered fit enough for the purpose, or in case circumstances so shape themselves as to precipitate a crisis. The Congress desires to draw the attention of Congressmen to Gandhiji's declaration that he can only undertake the responsibility of declaring Civil Disobedience when he is satisfied that they are strictly observing discipline and are carrying out the constructive programme prescribed in the Independence Day pledge.

"The Congress seeks to represent and serve all classes and communities without distinction of race or religion, and the struggle for Indian Independence is for the freedom of the whole nation. Hence the Congress cherishes the hope that all classes and communities will take part in it. The Civil Disobedience is to invoke the spirit of sacrifice in whole action.

"The Congress hereby authorises the All-India Congress Committee and in the event this being necessary, the Working Committee to take all steps to implement the Working Committee resolution as the Committee concerned may deem necessary."

Mr. Gandhi scored a personal triumph at Ramgarh as, in response to his speeches to the delegates, the voice of opposition, such as it was, was effectively stifled, and there was evidence of a general readiness to follow his lead implicitly.

In obedience to his directions, the various Congress organisations in the country converted themselves into Satyagraha committees, and a large number of Congressmen, including ex-Ministers, enrolled themselves as active Satyagrahis, ready to make any sacrifice to secure the Congress objective of independence for India.

Notwithstanding, there is no sign at the time of writing of an early start of civil disobedience. Muslim opposition to such a movement is unmistakable no less than to any further progress in the constitutional sphere except on the lines chalked out by the All-India Muslim League at Lahore (See chapter on Muslim organisations).

The National Liberal Federation.

The definite breach between the moderate and extremist elements in the Congress at its special session in Bombay in August 1918 (vide 1919 edition of this book) witnessed the birth of the National Liberal Federation which has, since then, been the platform of Indian moderate leaders. It held its first session in Bombay in 1918. Sir Surendranath Banerjee presiding. The Federation adopted for its creed the old Congress formula which was set aside by the Nagpur Congress. The Liberal Party in India has always been the rallying point of moderately progressive opinion. It has consistently stood for a pure type of nationalism and orderly progress through peaceful and constitutional means, as opposed to the revolutionary creed and policy of the Congress. During the first five or six years of its existence, the party played a useful and valuable part in politics and exerted a wholesome influence on public life. The death of the Rt. Hon. E. S. Montagu was a serious blow to the Indian Liberal Party whose influence on Indian affairs steadily waned since then. The Indian Round Table Conference brought it again to the forefront, but its influence again suffered partly as the result of the "reactionary provisions" of the Government of India Act of 1935 and partly as the result of the growing strength of the Congress organisation. The return of the Congress to the constitutional path ousted it from Indian politics. At the time of writing the Liberal Party exists only in name, there being no place for a middle group in Indian affairs of the present day. Indeed, it was felt necessary to enter at the last session of the Liberal Federation a special plea for the continuance of the Liberal Party in reply to suggestions that the party be wound up.

Shortly after the annual session of the Liberal Federation in 1935 there were rumours of an understanding with the Congress in order jointly to contest the elections, but these were soon proved to be unfounded. Efforts were doubtless made to bring about this consummation, but it was found there was very little chance of the Congress and Liberals agreeing on any joint programme of work—their outlook was so widely divergent.

The general elections for the provincial legislatures under the Government of India Act of 1935 not only proved that the Congress had enormous influence over the electorate but also confirmed the exit of Liberals from active political life in India. Few Liberal candidates contested the elections, but hardly any was successful. During the past two or three years the Liberal Party existed only in name. Its leaders, however, made their existence felt by occasional contributions to the discussion of public questions. They also played a valuable part in offering sober and constructive criticism of the policies and actions of the majority party, the Congress. Such criticism was all the more useful owing to the absence of an opposition in most of the provincial legislatures in which the Congress is now in power.

Although the Liberals hold no less progressive views than Congressmen, there is a fundamental difference between the two: the former have fixed Dominion Status within the Empire as their ambition, while the latter have set "complete independence" as their goal; similarly in the matter of method, the Liberals are opposed to direct action and are wedded to constitutional forms of agitation to accelerate the pace of the country's political advance.

There is another direction in which the Liberal Party's sentiments may be said to be different from that of the Congress. Having an abiding faith in the British connection and being convinced of the potentialities for good of the British Empire, the Liberal Party constantly wishes well by the Empire and what it stands for. For this reason no member of the Party wishes anything but success for the Empire in the struggle which it is waging against Nazism. The Congress, on the other hand, is at best lukewarm in its support for the British success in the present war. Of the convictions of the Liberal Party in this behalf the annual session of the Indian National Liberal Federation held at Allahabad in December last provided ample proofs.

Dr. R. P. Paranjpye, the veteran Liberal leader presided over the session which was held at Allahabad and in his address uttered a warning against the policy of isolation which the Congress demand implied. He said:—

To the vast majority of Congressmen who have adopted independence as India's goal but who give only lip service to the creed of non-violence, it should be apparent that there is no place in these days for states that are not fully prepared to defend themselves in all eventualities. It should be obvious to them that comparative safety lies only in an intimate association with a large and powerful organisation like the British Commonwealth of Nations. Weakness and resulting non-violence will be no safeguard against nations that are out to grab as large portions of the world as they can. An independent India standing entirely alone on its own resources will inevitably fall a victim to some other Power, be it Japan, Russia, Italy or Germany. Finally the present international situation must serve as a warning to the British Government also."

Dr. Paranjpye described as impolitic the Congress insistence on a constituent assembly.

"The scheme can be riddled with objections and its discussion is likely to create further difficulties. It seems magnificent to call such an assembly elected an adult suffrage; but does one seriously think that the illiterate villager, who would form the vast portion of the electorate, is capable of pronouncing an opinion upon complicated matters like the machinery of the Government of a vast country like India? Is it too uncharitable to say that Mr. Gandhi expects to carry the uneducated voter off his feet by means of a whirlwind campaign in which high-sounding words like truth, ahimsa, charkha, dharma, untouchability, reinforced, if need be, by the threat of a fast, would be used as slogans to give him a mandate to do what he likes? Is it not likely that such a campaign will lead to inter-communal riots unless there is previous understanding with the leaders of other parties?

Already there have been several modifications of the original idea of adult suffrage: minorities are to be given the right of separate election for the purpose of electing this assembly; the question of weightage has been left beautifully vague; the question of the representation of Indian States has been untouched."

He continued:

"To me it appears to have been tactical mistake on the part of the Congress to insist at this juncture on a formal declaration by Government about the future system of Government in India with a veiled threat of non-co-operation. While I say this I am equally clear that Government of its own accord should have come out with an appeal and a declaration of policy which would have stirred the imagination of the Indian people and enlisted their heart, as I believe their head already was on the side of the democracies which had taken up arms in defence of freedom and international order."

At the same time, Dr. Paranjpye questioned the wisdom of British policy which he ascribed to suspicion. "For nearly a century Britain has followed a policy in regard to India which is mainly dictated by suspicion. Whatever basis there might have been for it immediately after the Mutiny, this policy has now been shown up as unstatesmanlike. If India had been properly organised for defence it would have had a tremendous weight on the international situation. Its vast manpower and its almost infinite natural resources have not been utilised as they should have been."

"An immediate result of the war on India has been the suspension of democratic Government in seven provinces and the taking over by the Governors of the administration of these provinces in their own hands. Whatever one may think about the way in which the Congress Ministries have carried on the administration for 27 months, these resignations are to be regretted in every way. The whole position appears to have been grossly mismanaged both by the British Government and the Congress Ministries. Government appear to have overlooked the fact that the India of 1939 is different from the India of 1914 and to assume that Indian self-respect will reconcile itself to any action that Government may independently take. Indians recognise that defence measures have to be taken in secret long beforehand, but it should have been possible to secure the acquiescence of the leaders of Indian opinion in the Central and even provincial legislatures before Indian troops were sent abroad to Egypt, Singapore and other places. Further when war was actually declared a secret session of the Central Legislature should have been immediately called to acquaint India with all aspects of the question, and India would have become a belligerent voluntarily instead of the mere fiat of the British Government. But Government appear to have taken merely a formal and legalistic view of its position and immediately declared India a belligerent. This reading of the situation appears justified from a consideration of the declarations made by Mahatma Gandhi and Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru immediately on the declaration of war. But imagination is the last thing our Government possesses and a fine opportunity of winning the heart of India was allowed to slip away."

Reviewing the present position in India Dr. Paranjpye said—

"It is now time to take stock of the situation and examine the prospects of democracy in India. In the first place the fears entertained by the British diehards about the transfer of law and order to popularly elected ministries have on the whole proved unfounded. Though there have been many complaints, some of them with a substratum of truth but most of them without any foundation, one can say in general that responsible Government in the provinces has proved moderately successful. Occasionally there has been a tendency to ride roughshod over classes in which their opponents have predominance."

"The great danger to democracy in India appears to be the growing spirit of totalitarianism both in the Congress and the Muslim League. The Congress Ministries in the eight provinces could not by any stretch of imagination be held responsible to the members of their legislatures or the primary electors. They were the bond slaves of a small junta called the Parliamentary Committee and of the Mahatma who really controls all organisations of the Congress and whose word is law—

On the communal question Dr. Paranjpye expressed the following view.

"The main cause of all this tension is however the amour propre of both sides. The Congress considers itself entitled to represent the whole nation including the Muslims, while the Muslim League wants to be recognised as the only body representing the Muslims. To an observer who is in neither of these camps it seems that while there is some substratum of truth in both these claims they cannot be fully sustained. The Congress is undoubtedly the biggest and best organised political body in the country. But it cannot be considered as the sole representative of all sections."

"How to solve this question of strained Hindu-Muslim relations is the question of the hour. The immediate causes of riots are well-known, cow-slaughter, music before mosques, conversion and other religious or quasi-religious matters can, I believe, be settled if there is a will to settle them on the part of the leaders. The real cause is political in nature. Muslims feel that being in a minority they are likely to be oppressed by the majority community. This is really an absurd idea, as in political matters Hindus do not generally act unitely as Hindus but are divided into many parties and sections, first on the score of political and economic differences of outlook and secondly on account of the distinctions of caste, language, religious opinions and province. They are not known to act together, and I do not think that the Muslim fear is well grounded. But taking facts as they are, it is desirable to see if any political remedies can be devised so that the two communities can learn to work with one another."

The Liberal Federation passed the following resolutions:—

"The Federation strongly condemns the policy of aggression followed by the totalitarian States against smaller or weaker States and sympathises with the victims. The Federation considers that Britain and France are fighting Germany in the cause of democracy and freedom, and feels that Indian sympathies are on the side of democratic nations and that the whole of India wishes that their efforts will be crowned with success.

"The Federation appeals to all Indians to give their support to the cause for which the democracies are fighting. The Federation is convinced that the larger interests of India are bound up with the defeat of Nazism and the success of the cause of democracy and freedom, but in order to enable India to put forth its whole hearted support, the imagination of the people should be captured by a change in the attitude of the British Government regarding the future of India."

"This Federation strongly urges (1) that the Government of India Act of 1935 should be so amended (a) as to provide for the establishment of complete responsible government in the provinces and on a federal basis at the Centre so that India may automatically become a Dominion within the meaning of the Balfour Declaration of 1926 and of the Statute of Westminster on the conclusion of the war, and (b) as to secure to the subjects of the States the right of election of State representatives. (2) that meanwhile immediate steps should be taken to nationalise the Army so as to enable them to shoulder the responsibility of Dominion Status."

The Federation is strongly of the opinion that the future constitution of India should be framed by Indians themselves, but considers that the idea of the proposed Constituent Assembly is impracticable and is likely to retard our progress. The Federation therefore suggests that a conference be convened in India by His Majesty's Government for framing the constitution and that it should be composed of:

(1) the representatives of elected members of the provincial and Central legislatures in British India elected on the basis of proportional representation;

(2) the representatives of elected members of the legislatures of Indian States;

(3) the Rulers of major States or their Ministers invited by the Viceroy and the representative of other Princes elected by the Chamber of Princes;

(4) representatives elected by landholders, associations representing trade and commerce and associations representing agricultural and industrial labour and

(5) a certain number of the members of the conference to be nominated by the Viceroy to represent such interests and views as many otherwise go unrepresented."

MUSLIM ORGANISATIONS.

The awakening of political consciousness among Muslims in India as a separate entity dates back to 1906 when the All-India Muslim League was formed. It worked up its influence steadily, so that when it was hardly ten years old it became sufficiently important to enter into an agreement—known since as the Lucknow Pact—with the powerful Indian National Congress. The League fell on evil days in the 'twenties, and differences set in among its members. When enhanced powers were conferred on India by the Montford Reforms, Muslims became more and more politically minded and began to aspire for a greater share in the control of the country and in Government. A feeling gave rise to the formation of a new body whose promoters concentrated on aggressive presentation of Muslim demands. With the prospect of still further constitutional reforms at the end of the first ten years of the working of the Montford Scheme, these leaders strove to organise Muslims into an influential body which would safeguard their interests more effectively than the League. The result was the All-Parties Muslim Conference in 1928. The publication of the Communal Award and its inclusion in the White Paper Scheme of Reforms in 1933 helped this process of consolidation. An attempt was made early in 1934 to consolidate the community by healing the split within the Muslim League and, if possible, bringing the League and the Congress together to work as a united body. This failed, but the former object was lost and the League marched from strength to strength until it emerged as a powerful organisation of the Muslim community on the eve of the first elections to the provincial legislatures under the Government of India Act of 1935. For the first time in the political history of Muslims their representative institution functioned as a vigorous and active all-India organisation with results which flattered Mr. Jinnah, and his co-workers. Doubtless Mr. Jinnah, who was the guiding spirit behind this new activity, was handicapped by fissiparous tendencies and reactionary forces in distant provinces beyond the sphere of his direct influence.

Shortly after the elections, Mr. Jinnah explained the position of the League members of provincial legislatures vis-à-vis other groups. "The constitution and policy of the League do not prevent us from co-operation with others. On the contrary, it is part and parcel of our basic principle that we are free and ready to co-operate with any group or party from the very inception, or inside the legislature, if the basic principles are determined by common consent."

the two could not come together. The situation was rendered more difficult by the attitude of stiffness adopted by the Congress and its President, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru. Mr. Jinnah refused to convert the League into an understudy of the Congress and firmly upheld the independence of the Muslim community. The fact, found as the result of the election, that it did not have the support of the Muslim community. Very few Congress Muslims were put up as candidates for the elections, and even they failed. The Congress therefore set about roping in the Muslims by an appeal to their economic conscience, explaining that the Congress was out to alleviate the sufferings of the masses, Muslims as well as Hindus, and to uplift the nation as a whole. In this process the League and its leaders came in for a great deal of violent criticism at the hands of the Congress managers. On behalf of the League Mr. Jinnah retorted: "The Congress have not the monopoly, nor are they the sole custodians of Indian nationalism. As I have always maintained, the Muslim League is prepared to join hands with any progressive party in the fight for the country's freedom, but to achieve this the question of minorities must be settled satisfactorily. Here I am not talking of only Muslims but all minorities. Further, we are not prepared to merge ourselves into any organisation, however great it may be, and however advanced its programme and policy may be unless it is determined by common consent."

Paying little heed to these words of warning, the Congress leaders went their own way. Puffed with the success at the polls, they affected to ignore the claims of Muslim leaders. In what may be described as non-Muslim provinces—that is, those in which the Muslims are in a minority—the Congress formed Ministries without consulting and securing the co-operation of the Muslim League. No doubt attempts were made to arrive at an understanding with the Muslim League, but they failed mainly on account of the Congress demand that wherever such an understanding was reached the Muslim League should cease to be a separate party body and merge itself into the Congress-League Party. The League, for was willing to co-operate but not on the terms imposed by the Congress. In the result the negotiations failed, and the League remained in the Opposition. Although the bulk of the Muslim representatives returned to the provincial legislatures by the electorate were in opposition to the Congress the latter proceeded to constitute Governments with Muslim Ministers who did not represent Muslim opinion in the legislature. Nowhere in any of the so-called Congress provinces did the Muslim Ministers have the support of the majority or even a decent number of Muslim legislators. Thus these Muslim Ministers in the Congress provinces were the objects of repeated displays of Muslim hostility.

Having failed to reach an agreement with the League and its leaders, the Congress tried to crush the League and its leaders by making a direct approach to the Muslim masses through an economic and national programme. For a time this appeared to succeed, but eventually failed to achieve its object. The League leaders counteracted the Congress propaganda by pointing out to the Muslim masses that their true interests lay in their organisation under the banner of the League which alone could serve them truly. The League's counter-drive succeeded in a large measure aided by allegations that in provinces where the Congress was running the Government the Muslim minorities were not treated well. The Congress, on the other hand, inspired movements to undermine the authority of the Ministers in Bengal, the Punjab, Assam and Sind, and in the last named it actually succeeded in overthrowing the Ministry. The widening gulf between the Congress and the League gave an additional stimulus to the consolidation of the Muslim forces under the League which found fruition at the Lucknow session of the League in the autumn of 1937.

The session was unique in several respects. For the first time in the history of the Muslim organisational movement, complete unity was achieved, and every section of Muslim opinion, including those which till then had been opposed to the League or outside it, rallied round the League. There was no discordant note and Muslim political unity was complete. The Muslim League emerged the only strong and influential political organisation of the Muslim community.

The session changed the creed of the League to "the establishment in India of full independence in the form of a federation of free democratic states in which the rights and interests of the Muslims and other minorities are adequately and effectively safeguarded in the constitution."

On the subject of federation, the League passed the following resolution: "The All-India Muslim League records its emphatic disapproval of the scheme of All-India federation as embodied in the Government of India Act of 1935, and is opposed to its introduction, and urges upon the British Government to refrain from its enforcement as it considers the scheme to the interests of the people and to those of Muslims in details of the proceedings of Indian Year Book 1938-39)

The enthusiasm engendered by the success of the Lucknow session was kept up in succeeding months by an intensive organisation of branch Leagues in every province and district.

The foundations of Muslim solidarity laid at the Lucknow session of the League in the autumn of 1937 proved very strong indeed. The League grew from strength to strength in the two succeeding years and today it is admittedly the most powerful organisation of the community. The League's spokesmen claim that it is the only mouthpiece of the Muslims, and one may be inclined to recognise that claim but for the existence of a large number of Muslims who are members of the Congress. There may be two opinions about the claim that the League is the only organisation of the community, but no one can question that it is the most powerful and the most influential.

Three rallies of the League were held in the year 1938-39 at Karachi, Patna and Sholapur, and immense enthusiasm was evinced by the community at each of these. Notwithstanding the claims of the Congress and those Muslims who do not belong to the League, it cannot be gainsaid that the League steadily continued to consolidate its position with the passage of time.

With the outbreak of the war and the changes it wrought in Indian politics, the League found itself in an extremely advantageous position. A perusal of the chapter on the Indian National Congress will show how the Congress withdrew its ministries from the provinces where it had held sway for nearly two and a half years. As a result of this the League came to be on a par with the Congress in that both were now out of office and without the power and influence which went with it. Whereas the Congress lost through the resignation of its ministries such bargaining power as it had while in office, the League acquired some indirect power through the international complications that resulted from the war. Again, whereas the Congress had alienated the sympathies of the Indian Princes by sponsoring and encouraging agitation for responsible government for the States people, the League earned the friendship of the Princely order by condemning such activities and upholding the rights and privileges of the Indian Princes in any revision of the Indian Constitution. In yet another direction the League manoeuvred itself into a comfortable position; whereas, the Congress categorically withheld its co-operation from the war, the League abstained from taking any such attitude and merely insisted on the satisfaction of its claims prior to making up its mind.

The utmost that the League did in respect of the war in the autumn of 1939 was to declare that the opinions and sentiments expressed by Sir Sikander Hyat Khan (offering Indian Muslims' support to the British cause) "in no way represented the view of the Muslims of India."

A fortnight after the declaration of the war, the Working Committee of the League passed a resolution which illustrates the tact and firmness with which the League steered the Muslim ship. A week earlier the Viceroy had announced the suspension of the preparations for the inauguration of the federal part of the 1935 Constitution. The League Committee welcomed that declaration, but thought it would have been better if the federal scheme had been completely abandoned instead of being suspended.

On the wider question of Muslims' attitude to the war, the Committee stated that "if full, effective and honourable co-operation of the Mussalmans is desired by the British Government in the grave crisis which is facing the world today and if it is desired to bring it to a successful termination it must create a sense of security and satisfaction among the Mussalmans and take into their confidence the Muslim League, which is the only organisation that can speak on behalf of Muslim India."

Side by side with the demand for the redress of Muslim grievances and the assertion that their full and free consent should be obtained before any change in the Constitution was attempted, the League continued its campaign against the Congress ministries, to which a reference has been made in last year's edition of the "Indian Year Book." Apart from the "atrocities" which, the League affirmed, had been perpetrated on the Muslim minorities in the provinces administered by the Congress, the League made a fresh point which was soon to become the nucleus of a serious development in Indian politics.

In a resolution passed in September 1939, the Working Committee of the League said: "Muslim India occupies a special and peculiar position in the polity of India, and for several decades it had hoped to occupy an honourable place in the national life, government and administration of the country, and had worked for a free India with free and independent Islam, in which they could play an equal part with the major community with a complete sense of security for their religions, political, cultural, social and economic rights and interests. But the developments that have taken place, especially since the inauguration of the provincial constitution based on the so-called democratic parliamentary system of government and the recent experiences of over two years, have established beyond any doubt that it has resulted wholly in a permanent communal majority and the domination by the Hindus over the Muslim minorities, whose life and liberty, property and honour are in danger, and even their religious rights and culture are being assailed and annihilated every day under the Congress Governments in various provinces.

"That while Muslim India stands against exploitation of the people of India and has repeatedly declared in favour of 'a free India,' it is equally opposed to domination by the Hindu majority over the Mussalmans and other minorities and vassalisation of Muslim India, and is irrevocably opposed to any federal objective which must necessarily result in a majority community rule under the guise of democracy and parliamentary system of government. Such a constitution is totally unsuited to the genius of the peoples of the country, which is composed of various nationalities and does not constitute a national state."

This attack on provincial autonomy and on majority rule was an altogether new line which was struck almost for the first time by the League. Till then the Muslim demand had always been for effective safeguards for the protection of the Muslim community's religious, cultural and other rights; now the Muslims began to question the very basis of democracy and declared that the western democracy in the sense of rule by majority was unsuitable. It will be seen later in this chapter that this was developed in the summer of 1940 into a demand for the separation of Muslims on the ground that they constituted an integral nation and not a minority in the Indian population.

In the succeeding weeks numerous attempts were made to ascertain the grievances of the Muslims and to find out whether they were justified—in other words, whether the Congress ministries had been guilty of oppressing them or even neglecting them. There was a talk of a joint tour of the provinces by the Hon. Mr. Fazlul Huq of Bengal and Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru; there was also a proposal to refer the League allegations to an impartial tribunal; attempts were also made by the leaders of the Congress to meet the League's spokesmen with a view to clearing up these charges. But all these ended in smoke.

Indeed, they lost their point when late in the autumn, the Congress, owing to differences between itself and the British Government on the question of India's future status, called upon the various provincial ministries to resign in protest. (For details see chapter on the Indian National Congress).

Nevertheless, attention continued to be focussed on these charges by a countrywide demonstration on the part of Muslims to greet the exit of the Congress ministries. This was called the "Deliverance Day" and at the instance of Mr Jinnah large bodies of Muslims gathered together to offer their thanks to God for "freeing them from the oppression of the Congress ministries."

Encouraged by the concern shown by the British Government for the protection of the interests of Muslims and other minorities, Mr. Jinnah returned to the "atrocities" charges and demanded the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into them; but this was soon abandoned, as the British Government dismissed it summarily on the ground, among others, that such an inquiry would only serve to exacerbate the already strained relations between the Hindus and Muslims.

Meanwhile, discussions on the political field continued and early in October 1939 the Viceroy called into consultation leaders of all sections of opinion in India with a view to ascertaining their wishes in the matter of constitutional reform. On the conclusion of these consultations, the Viceroy issued an exhaustive statement on Britain's War aims in India, (for details see chapter on The Indian National Congress)

Without entering into the political details of this statement, it is enough to note here that it gave the Muslim community the requisite assurance concerning its status in future adjustments. This is evident from the resolution passed by the Working Committee of the League which met in Delhi towards the end of October 1939. The Committee hailed the Viceroy's statement as a new charter of hope for the minorities and as a recognition of the League's right to full say in the future constitutional arrangements. From this resolution one can infer that the League found in the Viceroy's declaration an acknowledgment of the League's status as an essential factor in any political development on an all-India basis. It was assumed that there was in the Viceroy's statement a basis for understanding between the Muslims and the British Government for the better prosecution of the war but Mr. Jinnah was asked to seek further clarification of details with particular reference to previous demands such as protection of Muslims in non-Muslim provinces.

Mr. Jinnah, on behalf of the League, saw the Viceroy for a second time later in the year. This time there was a joint consultation with the Congress leaders in an effort to secure a Congress-League understanding in a view to devising a common basis for the association of non-Muslims with the Central Government in the war. The question relating to the provincial field or to the central machinery until the British Government had complied with the demand for a declaration of British intentions in regard to India's future constitution. Thus, the November effort failed. (For details see chapter on the Indian National Congress).

In the weeks that followed Mr. Jinnah carried on correspondence with the Viceroy as directed by the Working Committee of the League in its resolution quoted above.

Meanwhile, the Viceroy made a speech in Bombay towards the end of January 1940 in which he further clarified Britain's intentions towards India and declared that Dominion Status was the goal of British policy in this country and that Great Britain was prepared to take steps immediately after the War to implement that offer, subject, of course, to justice being done as between the various parties and communities in India and His Majesty's Government.

On the basis of this speech there was a further consultation between the Viceroy and the leaders of the principal parties in February 1940. During this conversation Mr. Jinnah urged on His Excellency the great importance attached by the Muslims and the other minorities to the safeguarding of their position in any settlement or discussions that might take place. His Excellency assured Mr. Jinnah that His Majesty's Government were fully alive to the necessity for safeguarding the legitimate interests of the minorities and that he need be under no apprehension that the importance of those interests would be lost sight of.

This was almost immediately followed by the publication of the correspondence between the Viceroy and Mr. Jinnah. The Muslim leader asked: "(1) So soon as circumstances may permit, or immediately after the war, the entire problem of India's future constitution, apart from the Government of India Act, 1935, shall be examined and reconstructed de novo; (2) no declaration shall, either in principle or otherwise, be made or any constitution be enacted by His Majesty's Government or Parliament without the approval and consent of the two major communities in India, namely, Muslims and Hindus; (3) His Majesty's Government should try and meet all the reasonable national demands of the Arabs in Palestine; and (4) Indian troops will not be used outside India against any Muslim Power or country."

The Viceroy in his reply said: "My answer to your first question is that the declaration I made with the approval of His Majesty's Government on October 18 last does not exclude examination of any part either of the Act of 1935 or of the policy and plans on which it is based. With reference to your second point, I can assure you that His Majesty's Government are not under any misapprehension as to the importance of the contentment of the Muslim community to the stability and success of any constitutional developments in India. You need, therefore, have no fear that the weight which your community's position in India necessarily gives their views will be underrated. In framing their policy for Palestine, His Majesty's Government have endeavoured to meet all reasonable Arab demands, and they continue to be fully alive to the importance of that issue. Finally, you asked for an assurance that Indian troops will not be used outside India against any Muslim Power or country. This question is fortunately hypothetical, since His Majesty is not at war with any Muslim Power. You will appreciate, however, that it is impossible to give a guarantee in terms so wide as those of your letter, which would have the effect of limiting India's right to use its own arm in its own defence in circumstances which cannot now be foreseen: in the present situation, however, as you are aware, every precaution has been taken by His Majesty's Government at the instance of the Government of India to ensure that Muslim feeling in India on this matter is fully respected.

During all these months the relationship between the two major communities worsened steadily and many a communal riot occurred in the country. By far the most serious of these was the holocaust in Sind where a dispute over a civil claim that a certain building in Sukkur was at one time a mosque and should therefore be restored to the Muslim community developed into a wide-spread riot. Almost for the first time the virus spread to the rural areas.

Another development in the Muslim community worthy of notice is the growth of a militant spirit among a wide section of Muslims. An example of this was the organisation known as "Khaksars." True, it had been in existence for years past, but it was not until 1939-40 that its activities became felt. It is a semi-military organisation whose membership is variously estimated between 200,000 to 400,000. Armed with a spade, the Khaksars are brought up under an iron discipline and give implicit obedience to orders from the higher command, involving, in some case of breach, public flogging. In the middle of 1939 they were a source of trouble to the Government of the Punjab and more especially of the U. P. In the early summer of 1940 they came into violent conflict with the guardians of peace and order in the Punjab and an armed conflict ensued leading to firing by the police and number of casualties.

To return to the Muslim League. As already stated the idea of Muslims being a nation gathered during 1939-40 in which period a number of schemes for the formation of a Muslim bloc of autonomous states were mooted. For a time they were not regarded seriously; but from the proceedings of the annual session of the League held in April 1940 it became that the Muslim League was serious about this partition business. At Lahore, the Muslim community, as represented by the Muslim League, declared for Muslim independence. A resolution drafted by Mr. Jinnah unequivocally rejected the Government of India Act and demanded as the basic principle of any new plan the creation of independent states carved from the predominantly Muslim zones of north-western and eastern India.

Mr. Jinnah, who presided, reviewed the events since the last all-India session of the League at Patna, fifteen months previously, and observed that the League had won every by-election contested. The greatest pre-war danger, he said, had been Federation which, he added, the Muslims would never accept. He hoped that the war had persuaded the British Government finally to abandon the federal scheme.

Analysing his negotiations with the Viceroy, Mr. Jinnah said that something had been gained by the assurance that the promise to reopen the constitutional question "does not exclude the examination of any part of the 1935 Act or of the policy and plan on which it is based," but, he added, His Majesty's Government would be well advised to reassure the Muslims further that nothing would be imposed on them without their consent.

As for the future, India must be divided into autonomous nationalist states without the domination of one social order over another; Britain's settled democratic notions must be revised in time. Such divergent nationalities as Hindus and Muslims, he averred, could not be transformed into one nation by the artificiality of British Parliamentary statutes. The problem, Mr. Jinnah, contended, was international and must be so treated to avoid disaster. Separate States would cause rivalries to disappear and lead to friendly reciprocity between Muslim and Hindu India. The two represented differences not merely of religion, but of distinct social orders of peoples who neither inter-married nor inter-dined, who differed in philosophy, custom and literature, whose inspiration was drawn from different sources of history, whose epics and heroes were different and whose victories and defeats overlapped. The present unity of India dated only from the British conquest. "Muslims," Mr. Jinnah said "are a nation according to any definition of a nation, and they must have their homelands, their territory and their State. An honourable and peaceful solution is a sacred duty, but we cannot be diverted from our purpose."

The principal resolution of the session, which was carried unanimously, reiterated that "the scheme of federation embodied in the Government of India Act, 1935, is totally unsuited to and unworkable in the peculiar conditions of this country and is altogether unacceptable to Muslim India."

It further recorded its emphatic view that "while the declaration dated the 18th of October 1939, made by the Viceroy on behalf of His Majesty's Government is reassuring, insofar as it declares that the policy and plan on which the Government of India Act, 1935, is based will be reconsidered in consultation with the various parties interests and communities in India, Muslim India will not be satisfied unless the whole constitutional plan is reconsidered de novo and that no revised plan would be acceptable to the Muslims unless it is framed with their approval and consent."

"It is the considered view of this session of the all-India Muslim League that no constitutional plan would be workable in this country or acceptable to the Muslims unless it is designed on the following basic principle, i.e., that geographically contiguous units are demarcated into regions which should be so constituted with such territorial readjustments as may be necessary that the areas in which the Muslims are numerically in a majority, as in the north-western and eastern zones of India, should be grouped to constitute independent states in which the constituent unit shall be autonomous and sovereign."

"Adequate, effective and mandatory safeguards should be specifically provided in the constitution for minorities in the units and in the regions for the protection of their religious, cultural, economic, political, administrative and other rights and interests in consultation with them."

The Working Committee was authorised to frame a scheme of constitution in accordance with the above basic principles providing for the assumption finally by the respective regions of all powers such as defence, external affairs, communications, customs and such other matters as might be necessary.

This created a stir in the country among nationalists and Hindus alike and also among some Muslims. True the novelty of the thing caught the Muslim imagination but even among Muslims there were many who questioned the wisdom of the step suggested in the Lahore resolution. Apart from destroying Indian unity which had been built up after years of strenuous effort, it was argued by many, the Lahore scheme would place the Muslim minorities in Hindu provinces in a very unenviable position.

In order to propagate the Lahore scheme meetings were held among the Muslim community in several parts of the country, but it cannot be said that opinion was anywhere near unanimous in support of it.

As for the British Government, Lord Zetland, speaking in Parliament in April 1940, refused to countenance the partition proposal although he was inclined to sympathise with the motives underlying the League demand.

Government of India Act, 1935.

The seeds of the Government of India Act, which was placed on the Statute Book in 1935, were sown as far back as the autumn of 1930 when the Indian Round Table Conference met in London for the first time. Three sessions of the conference were held, and it concluded on December 24, 1932, some months later the British Government published their proposals for the reform of the Indian constitution based on the largest measure of agreement reached at the three sessions of the Round Table Conference. These proposals were embodied in a White Paper (March 1933) which was referred to a Committee of the two Houses of Parliament. The Committee submitted its report in October 1934. Based on the recommendations of this Committee, the Government of India Bill was presented to Parliament in October, 1935. The Bill has since become law with a few changes in its passage through Parliament.

The Act proposed to set up a Federation with limited re-sponsibility at the Centre, and provides for autonomy to the eleven provinces composing British India.

Formally inaugurated in April 1937, the provincial part of the new constitution functioned for about two and a half years with a fair amount of smoothness, but at the end of that period it broke down in seven out of the eleven provinces by the refusal of the party in power to carry on the work of Government. Thereupon the Governors of those provinces assumed sole charge of the Administration aided by Advisers responsible to him. The constitution remained virtually suspended. At the time these lines are being written it is proposed to ask Parliament to approve of this emergency machinery.

The federal part of the constitution could not be inaugurated according to plan owing to diverse factors—the difficulties experienced by the Princes in acceding to Federation except on the fulfilment of certain conditions, the internal, political and communal differences in British India and, above all, by the declaration of war which militated against any major changes in the Governmental Machinery at the centre. Even so, attempts are being made to revitalise the federal part of the Government of India Act, whose result, it is not possible to foretell.

The Federation which the Act, as it stands, provides differs from those in other parts of the world because its units are not homogeneous. The Indian States differ widely from the British India Provinces. These complications react upon the constitution. As Sir Samuel Hoare said in the House of Commons "they react, for instance, upon the provisions as to how the federation is to be formed, for it is obvious that the Princes, being voluntary agents, can only enter of their own volition. They react again upon the kind of executive and the kind of legislature that is proposed, each side of the federation obviously demanding adequate representation both in the government and in the federal legislature. They react again upon the relations between the two Federal Chambers, the Princes from the first attaching the greatest possible importance to the Chambers having equal powers. They react, further, upon the list of federal subjects, the Princes again rightly insisting that, apart from the functions of Government which they surrender to the Federation, there should be no interference in their internal sovereignty. These complications make a formidable list of difficulties."

The Act sets up a Federal Executive similar to the responsible executives in other federations of the Empire. The whole executive power of the Federation is conferred on the Governor-

General, and his Ministers are appointed to "aid and advise" him and hold office during his pleasure. The Ministry shall consist of persons in whom the Legislature has confidence and the Governor-General shall dismiss them when they lose that confidence.

In contrast, however, with Dominion Constitutions, the Governor-General of India is given special powers by the Act. In the first place the Departments of Foreign Affairs, Ecclesiastical Affairs and Defence are "reserved" and will be administered by him through the agency of counsellors; in the second place in all other departments he may act in certain cases and for certain purposes otherwise than on his ministers' advice.

The Act imposes upon him special responsibilities for:

- (a) The prevention of any grave menace to the peace or tranquility of India or any part thereof.
- (b) The safeguarding of the financial stability and credit of the Federal Government
- (c) The safeguarding of the legitimate interests of the minorities.
- (d) The securing to, and to the dependents of, persons who are or have been members of the public services of any rights provided or preserved for them by or under the Act and the safeguarding of their legitimate interests.
- (e) The prevention of discrimination.
- (f) The prevention of action which would subject goods of United Kingdom or Burmese origin imported into India to discriminatory or penal treatment.
- (g) The protection of the rights of any Indian State and the rights and dignity of the rulers thereof.
- (h) The securing that the due discharge of his functions with respect to matters with respect to which he is by, or under, the Act required to act in his discretion, or to exercise his individual judgment, is not prejudiced or impeded by any course of action taken with respect to any other matter.

The Federal Legislature will consist of two chambers: the Council of State and the Federal Assembly. The Council of State will consist of not more than 104 representatives of the federating Indian States and of 136 representatives of British India elected by the people, of whom six will be chosen by the Governor-General in his discretion. The Council of State is to be a permanent body with a provision that a third of its members should retire every third year. The representatives of British India are to be chosen on a communal basis, while those of the States will be appointed by the Rulers of the States concerned in accordance with the relative rank and importance of the State. (See table at the end of this chapter for the composition of the British Indian half of the Council of State.)

The Federal Assembly will consist of not more than 125 representatives of the federating Indian States and of 250 representatives of British India mostly elected by the Provincial Legislatures—by the lower House of the Provincial Legislatures wherever there are two Houses.

The Federal Assembly is to continue for five years from the date appointed for their first meeting after the expiration of which it will be dissolved. The distribution of seats here will also be on a communal basis. Thus, the Hindu, Muslim and Sikh seats will be filled by the representatives of those communities in the Provincial Assemblies voting separately for a prescribed number of communal seats. Depressed Classes will have representation from among the Hindu seats. Besides these three main groups, Europeans, Anglo-Indians, Indian Christians, representatives of commerce and industry, landholders, representatives of labour and women will have seats. (See table at the end of this chapter for the composition of the British Indian half of the Federal Assembly.)

An "annual financial statement" setting out the estimated receipts and expenditure of the Federation in respect of every financial year will be laid before both Chambers of the Federal Legislature. The estimates of expenditure will show separately the sums required to meet expenditure charged upon the revenues of the Federation; and the sums required to meet other expenditure proposed to be made from the revenues of the Federation. Items falling under the former category will not be submitted to the vote of the Legislature. With a view to the observance of the public finance that no revenue should be made otherwise than on the responsibility of the Executive, it is provided in the Act that no demand for a grant is to be made unless recommended by the Governor-General.

The Federal Legislature alone may make laws upon any federal subject and the Provincial Legislature alone may make laws upon any subject treated as "concurrent"; but in case of conflict Federal legislation shall prevail unless the provincial law has been reserved for the consideration of the Governor-General and has received his assent.

The foregoing is a description of the framework of the India Federation. When half of the Indian States, on the basis of population and of representation in the Upper Federal Chamber, have acceded and after both Houses of Parliament have presented an address to His Majesty praying that the Federation may be brought into existence, a Royal Proclamation will give legal effect to the Federation of India.

The creation of a number of autonomous administrative units including two new ones, namely, Sind and Orissa, some of which have in recent years found it very difficult to make both ends meet, and the need for a strong Central Government presented some very difficult financial problems for the framers of the constitution. The allocation of sources of taxation and the settlement of heads of expenditure and debts, not only to enable the provinces progressively to develop but also to provide the Central Government with adequate funds to discharge its All-India responsibilities was the main problem. To secure a satisfactory solution of this problem the expert advice of Sir Otto Niemeyer was sought. His recommendations are summarised elsewhere in this volume.

The Government of India Act also establishes a Statutory Railway authority which will take over the executive authority of the Federation in respect of the regulation, construction, maintenance and operation of railways coming under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government. The powers which the Governor-General possesses of taking action in virtue of special responsibilities and in respect of the reserved subjects extend to the giving of directions to the Railway authority.

Under the Act a Federal Court is to be established which will consist of a Chief Justice of India and such number of other Judges as His Majesty may deem necessary. The Federal Court will ordinarily sit in Delhi. It will have an original jurisdiction and an appellate jurisdiction, in the latter in appeals from High Courts in British India and in Federated States. Its original jurisdiction will extend to any dispute between any two or more of the following, namely, the Federation, any of the Provinces and any of the Federated States. Provision is also made for an appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council from a decision of the Federal Court.

The Act abolishes the Council of the Secretary of State for India and makes him a Minister of the Crown individually responsible for the exercise of all authority vested in the Crown in relation to the affairs of India. He will, however, continue to be a member of the Cabinet and of Parliament, to which bodies he will be responsible for his actions.

Provincial Constitutions.

It may take two or three years before the federal part of the constitution is ready to function. In the meantime Provincial Autonomy is in operation. Under the Act there are eleven Governors' provinces, namely, Madras, Bombay, Bengal, the United Provinces, the Punjab, Bihar, the Central Provinces and Berar, Assam, the N. W. F. Province, Orissa and Sind, with power to the Crown by Order-in-Council to create, if deemed necessary, a new Province, increase or diminish the area of any province or alter the boundaries of any Province. The Provincial Executive is similar to that of the Federation in form.

In addition to the Governors' Provinces there are the following Chief Commissioners' provinces: British Baluchistan, Delhi, Ajmer-Merwara, Coorg, the Andaman and Nicobar Islands, the area known as Panth Piplida and such other Chief Commissioners' Provinces as may be created under the Act which will be administered by the Governor-General acting through a Chief Commissioner to be appointed by him.

The Provinces of Madras, Bombay, Bengal, the United Provinces, Bihar and Assam have two Chambers, Upper and Lower, namely, the Legislative Council and the Legislative Assembly, while the others have only one chamber, the Legislative Assembly. Representation in the Legislative Assembly is by separate electorates for each community based on the provisions of the Communal Award as modified by the Poona Pact of September 25, 1932, under which a number of seats out of the seats classified as general seats are reserved to the Depressed Classes. The life of the Provincial Legislatures is the same as that of the Federal.

In provinces with bi-cameral legislatures the Upper House will see that the Lower House does not indulge in hasty and ill-conceived legislation due to the temporary majority of any party. But the deliberations of the Upper House will also be subject to examination by the Lower House.

While there are no nominated members and no officials in the Assembly—all members of the Lower House are elected—the Governor has the right to fill some seats in the Provincial Council wherever one exists. (See tables at the end of this Chapter for the composition of the Provincial Councils and Provincial Assemblies.)

The constitution sets out the qualifications of electors. There are certain provisions of a general nature applicable to all Provinces while particular Provinces are dealt with separately, as in some cases the payment of local taxation, in other cases payment of local taxation, in other cases payment of land revenue is the main qualification. The new constitution has extended the existing franchise so as to enfranchise about 10 per cent. of the total population of British India. The Acts of 1915 and 1919 provided for an electorate of approximately 3 per cent. of the total population, the franchise based mainly on a property qualification. Under the reformed constitution women have a much wider franchise, over 6,000,000 women voters as compared with 315,000 provided by the acts of 1915 and 1919. The Act of 1935 secures representation for women, for the Depressed Classes, for industrial labour and for special interests and for the bulk of the small landholders, small cultivators, urban ratepayers as well as a substantial section of the poorer classes.

Under the old constitution the Provinces had no original or independent powers. The local Governments were under the superintendence, direction and control of the Governor-General-in-Council and the Secretary of State for India. The first step which the new constitution took was to create provinces with independence of their own and to assign to them a certain exclusive share of the activities of Government. All subjects have been transferred to the control of the legislature. The subjects which are classified as provincial are as indicated above, exclusively dealt with by the Provincial Government which have power to make laws for peace and good government. There are no more "reserved" subjects. All subjects are "transferred." The administration of all these subjects have passed from the bureaucracy to the control of Ministers responsible to the legislature. Such subjects include public order, courts, police, prisons, education, health and sanitation, public works, agriculture, forests, land revenue, excise, tolls, unemployment and certain classes of taxation.

Generally the Ministers are entrusted with the administration of their own departments. Under the old constitution they were merely advisers of the Governor. Under the new Constitution they are effective executives. Only in those spheres where the Governor retain a special responsibility does he have the right to act independently of the Ministers should he differ from their views. But normally such occasions are not frequent.

Both the Upper and Lower Houses have power to initiate legislation except that Money Bills can be initiated in the Lower House only. Should there be a difference of opinion between the two Houses with regard to a Bill the Governor has power to convene a joint session of the two Houses. Any Bill affirmed by the majority in the joint session shall be taken to have been duly passed.

Under the new Constitution the Governor has almost the same special responsibilities as the Governor-General except the one relating to financial stability and credit. The Governor has, notwithstanding the advice of his Ministers, power to take whatever action he thinks necessary for the due discharge of his responsibility for preserving the peace or tranquillity of the Provinces.

The following tables give the strength and composition of the Federal and Provincial Legislatures under the new constitution. —

War over-shadowed the work of the Indian Legislature in the autumn session of 1939 and in the Budget session of 1940. On August 19, 1939 the Central Legislative Assembly for the third time since the election of December 1934 received a new lease of life for a further period of one year from October 1, 1939.

When the Central Assembly met on September 4 the Leader of the House read out a short formal announcement declaring that the British Empire was at war with Germany. He promised that emergency ordinances would be shaped as Bills and brought quickly before the House. On September 11, addressing both the Houses His Excellency the Viceroy read out a message from His Majesty the King-Emperor and then briefly spoke of how war began and of the cause for which the Allies were fighting. Lord Linlithgow reaffirmed his support of Federation, but announced with regret that work on it must now be postponed. His Excellency appealed for unity and co-operation to help Government fight and win the war.

Defence of India Act.—The Defence of India Bill occupied most of the session and was the subject of vigorous debate. Based largely on existing war regulations in the United Kingdom, and following the lines of the Defence of India (Criminal Law Amendment) Act, 1915, the Bill conferred upon Government wide and drastic powers over civil life in India while war lasted. Government were empowered to prohibit or regulate meetings, fairs and processions, prevent the use of uniforms and flags, control the publication of news, the movement of people in certain areas, and entry into and departure from India. They were also armed with authority to regulate traffic, impress vessels, aircraft, vehicles and animals, censor messages and control trade or industry to increase war supplies. Some of the provisions were modified during the debate and by a Select Committee set up to examine the Bill. As a result persons sentenced to imprisonment or death were allowed the right of appeal and Government also gave an assurance that judges would be instructed to use their new powers mercifully. Both within and outside the legislature, these temporary restrictions on individual liberty were accepted as inevitable in a time of crisis.

For the rest the House dealt mainly with minor routine measures. Many members regretted the rejection of Dr. Deshmukh's Hindu Women's Right to Divorce Bill. Dr. Deshmukh had in the Delhi session moved its reference to a select committee and Sir N. N. Sarkar, Law Member, had opposed the measure. In the absence of Dr. Deshmukh, due to the Congress boycott of the legislatures, an unsuccessful attempt was made to postpone consideration of the Bill. A two-days debate ended in the Assembly rejecting the measure by 32 votes to 15.

Indian Census.—Other legislation passed in this session included the Indian Census Bill empowering officers to make house-to-house inquiries on the main heads of investigation, i.e., name, age, civil condition and means of livelihood. It may be mentioned in passing that the Indian Census is perhaps the cheapest in the world costing on a rough calculation some Rs. 12-8-0 per thousand which is fifteen times less than the cost in Britain. As Mr. J. A. Thorne, Acting Home Member, remarked when moving consideration of the bill: "The Indian census was a remarkable achievement both in the magnitude of the population to be dealt with and in the lowness of the cost at which the enumeration was made." The actual figures yielded by the last census in 1931 were 352,837,778 of whom the population of British India numbered 271,526,933, the remainder were subjects of Indian States.

Another important measure discussed in this session was the Trade Marks Registration Bill which provided for more effective protection of trade marks. The proposals embodied in the 84 clauses of this measure were based on the United Kingdom Trade Marks Act of 1938. The Bill was referred to a select committee and emerged with some minor changes to meet certain non-official requirements.

Lasting only 15 days the September session of the Central Assembly was the shortest since 1930.

In the Budget session of 1940 the Central Legislature had a heavy agenda. This was Delhi's first war session and besides the War Budget the session saw the introduction of the Railway Budget, the bill for the taxation of excess profits and legislation to bring European British subjects in India as far as possible into line with their fellow-members in other parts of the Empire in respect of war service.

Railway Budget 1940-41.—Introducing the Railway Budget on February 16 the Communications Member, Sir Andrew Clow, states that instead of the surplus of Rs. 205 lakhs anticipated for 1938-39, the year ended with a surplus of only 137 lakhs. For 1939-40, against an original estimate of earnings from State-owned lines of Rs. 94.75 crores, the Railway Department estimated Rs. 97.3 crores, an improvement of Rs. 255 lakhs. The revised estimate for working expenses was put at Rs. 65.35 crores against the original figure of Rs. 64.25 crores. Taken with a small decrease in interest charges this left a surplus of Rs. 363 lakhs instead of a surplus of Rs. 213 lakhs on which the budget was framed. The Communications Member stated that Government would have to carry over a debt estimated at Rs. 90 lakhs to be met out of the surplus for 1940-41. The gross traffic receipts for 1940-41 were estimated at Rs. 103 crores, and the expenses including interest charges placed at Rs. 95.46 crores. Excluding a sum of Rs. 5.19 crores on the receipt side in respect of worked lines and a corresponding amount on the expenditure side, the estimated gross surplus before payments to general revenues was placed at Rs. 8.29 crores. Of this it was estimated that Rs. 90 lakhs would have to go to meet the undischarged liability to general revenues in the current year. This left a balance of Rs. 2.98 crores which under the convention of 1924 would go into the Railway Reserve Fund. "No great business," said Sir Andrew Clow, "should be obliged to live a hand-to-mouth existence and the only sound policy is to endeavour during the good year to put something aside for the bad ones. It is my hope—a hope which, with the uncertainties ahead of us, cannot be a conviction—that next year will be a better one than the railways have had for quite a long time."

Despite the stimulus directly due to war conditions the Communications Member found himself unable without increasing rates to anticipate for 1940-41 a great surplus than that expected at the end of the current financial year. The increase in rates was necessitated by an increase in working expenses partly due to greater traffic but mainly due to the increased cost of stores and material both imported and indigenous. Assuming that this increase was almost certain to be progressive Government decided with effect from March 1 to increase existing rates and fares as follows:—Two annas in the rupee on the total freight including terminals and other such charges, on all consignments of goods traffic, excluding coal, coke, patent fuel, military traffic, railway materials and stores on revenue account, food grains, fodder and manures: two annas in the rupee on the total freight of each consignment of coaching traffic other than passenger: one anna per rupee of fare for all passenger traffic except for fares not exceeding one rupee; the existing surcharge on coal, coke and patent fuel to be increased from 12½ per cent. with a maximum of Re. 1 per ton to 15 per cent without a maximum—the rates prevailing in April 1935.

General Budget, 1940-41—On February 29, the Finance Member, Sir Jeremy Raisman, presented his first budget in the Central Assembly. For the financial year 1940-41, Sir Jeremy Raisman estimated that the total revenue would amount to Rs. 85.43 lakhs as compared to Rs. 87.76 lakhs in the revised estimates of the year. This included the greatly increased sum of Rs. 5.31 lakhs which the railways were expected to contribute to general revenues under the operation of the Railway Convention. On the revenue side, Customs and Central Excise Duties were expected to yield Rs. 46.00 lakhs against the current year's revised estimate of Rs. 50.07 lakhs, a decrease of Rs. 4.07 lakhs. Taxes on income were expected to yield Rs. 19.50 lakhs and Posts and Telegraphs a revenue of Rs. 12.35 lakhs. Sir Jeremy Raisman estimated the total expenditure at Rs. 92.59 lakhs including a provision for the Defence Services placed at Rs. 53.52 lakhs. This left a prospective deficit of Rs. 7.16 lakhs.

The Finance Member explained that an agreement had been reached with His Majesty's Government under which the whole of the Defence expenditure incurred by India would be apportioned between the two Governments on the following basis: India was to bear (1) a fixed annual sum representing the normal net effective costs of the Army in India under peace conditions, plus (2) an addition to allow for rises in prices, plus (3) the cost of such war measures as can be regarded as purely Indian liabilities by reason of their having been undertaken by India in her own interests, and (4) a lump sum payment of one crore of rupees towards the extra cost of maintaining India's External Defence Troops overseas. The total amount by which the net annual finance expenditure increased in India during the war years would exceed the aggregate of items (1) to (3) would be recovered from His Majesty's Government. The total extra expenditure thrown on the Defence estimates payable by India as a result of the war, after excluding Rs. 20 lakhs on account of Waziristan, was Rs. 839 lakhs.

To supplement the revenue for 1940-41 to the amount of Rs. 7.16 lakhs which was required to balance expenditure Sir Jeremy Raisman proposed new taxation on petrol and sugar. The Excise Duty on sugar was raised from Rs. 2 to Rs. 3 a cwt. and this together with a corresponding increase in the import duty was reckoned to yield Rs. 1.90 lakhs. The duty on motor spirit was also raised from annas 10 to 12 a gallon; the additional revenue from this increase was placed at Rs. 1.40 lakhs. With Rs. 91 lakhs from the Revenue Reserve Fund, Rs. 300 lakhs from the Excess Profits Tax and Rs. 330 lakhs from the enhanced duties on sugar and petrol it was reckoned that revenue would total Rs. 92.64 lakhs and expenditure Rs. 92.59 lakhs leaving a surplus of Rs. 5 lakhs.

Excess Profits Tax Bill—Among the first measures to be discussed by the Central Assembly in the Budget session was the Excess Profits Tax Bill which Government had published late in January. In its original form the Bill sought to impose a tax of 50 per cent. of excess of profits made in any accounting period after April 1, 1939 over what was called in the Bill "standard profits." These profits were in respect of business in existence prior to April 1, 1936, the average of various accounting periods from 1935 to 1938, subject to certain adjustments. The taxpayer was given the option of choosing between several periods or averages, and provision was made for a reference to a board of referees if the profits during each of the periods which could otherwise have been chosen were abnormally low. The "standard profits" for business started after April 1, 1936 were computed by a reference to a percentage of the capital employed in the business. The provisions of the Bill followed closely those of the excess profits tax imposed in the United Kingdom in 1939.

The measure emerged from the select committee to which it was referred with considerable amendments. The table of standard years was widened, the five months preceding the war excluded, the exemption limit raised by successive amendments from Rs. 20,000 to 36,000 and the Bill's scope was broadened so that relief could be granted in case of genuine hardship. In piloting the measure Sir Jeremy Raisman, the Finance Member, showed a most conciliatory spirit which the House greatly appreciated. In addition to altering the structure of the Bill Sir Jeremy Raisman assured the House that it would be administered in a spirit sympathetic to the growth of industry, particularly of new and pioneer industries. On March 20 the Assembly passed the third reading of the Bill.

European National Service—Among other important measures taken up during this session was the bill "to make certain provisions relating to service by European British subjects in the armed forces of, or in a civil capacity, under the Crown." The bill applied to male European subjects between the ages of 18 and 50 with certain exceptions. It was designed to bring European British subjects in India as far as possible into line with their fellow members in other parts of the Empire in respect of war service. Statutory recognition was provided for national service advisory committees constituted by the Central Government. Statutory provision was also made for the reinstatement of any European British subject called up under the Act in his employment at the termination of service. The Bill provoked some criticism from Opposition members who mistakenly felt that the restriction of the bill to Europeans indicated an attitude which Indians strongly resented. The third reading was passed by 40 votes to 12.

Drugs Bill—Prominent among the legislation passed during this session was the much delayed Drugs Bill which sought to standardise both imported and indigenous drugs. The Bill established a Board of Technical Experts to advise the Central and Provincial Governments on technical matters and also made provision for the control of the import, manufacture, sale and distribution of drugs. Standards for imported and indigenous drugs were also laid down. Certain changes were made by the Select Committee which provided for increased representation of the pharmaceutical profession on the Drugs Technical Advisory Board by allowing for the nomination by the Central Government of one additional member of that profession. The Committee also suggested the enlargement of the number of members of the Board and the elements represented on it. The House agreed to the enlargement of the Board by the addition of an elected representative of the Central Council of the Indian Medical Association and an elected representative of the branches in India of the British Medical Association. It was also agreed to set up a consultative committee to advise the Central Government. Provincial Governments and the Drugs Technical Advisory Board. The Bill as amended was passed.

In June 1940 His Excellency the Governor-General decided to extend the life of the Legislative Assembly for a further period of one year from October 1, 1940 when the extension effected in his Order dated August 10, 1939 expired. The Viceroy's decision was generally regarded as inevitable in the prevailing circumstances. On October 1, 1940 the Central Assembly began the seventh year of its existence having been extended four years beyond its normal triennial term.

The Indian Tariff Board.

The Indian Tariff Board is an ad hoc body constituted from time to time as necessity arises to investigate the claims made by any Indian industry for protection. It generally consists of a President and two members, one of whom is normally a Government official. It has, subject to the approval of the Government of India, power to co-opt other members for particular enquiries.

It tours over the industrial centres in India where the industry referred to it is located and if satisfied after detailed enquiries that the claim for protection is justified it makes its recommendations to the Government of India. The last Tariff Board became functus officio early in 1939 after completing an enquiry into the question of extending protection to the Indian sericulture industry.

Origin of Indian Emigration.—Emigration is prohibited by the Hindu Shastras, and there is little evidence of any settlement of Indians overseas in early times except in Sumatra, Java and Ceylon. Emigration for purpose of labour dates from the beginning of the 19th century. From 1800 A. D. onwards Indians crossed the Bay to the Straits Settlements to work on the sugar, spice, tapioca, and coconut plantations of Penang, and this intercourse was allowed to continue for long without regulation. The first officially recorded instance of genuine recruitment for labour emigration occurred in 1830, when a French merchant, named Joseph Argand, carried some 150 artisans to Bourbon. The abolition of slavery in British colonies in 1834 gave the first great impetus to the movement. The sugar planters of Mauritius at once turned to India as their best recruiting ground, and between 1834 and 1837 obtained at least 7,000 recruits from Calcutta. The Government of India at a very early stage realized the necessity of bringing such emigration under regulation. The Law Commission was asked to investigate the case and to make recommendations for securing the well-being of emigrants. They advised that no legislation was required except in order to prevent undue advantage being taken of the simplicity and ignorance of emigrants by providing that a magistrate should satisfy himself that all contracts were entered into freely and understood by them and in order to secure that sufficient provision was made for their accommodation and sustenance during the voyage. A copy of every engagement was also to be transmitted to the Government under which the emigrants were to live. These recommendations were embodied in the first Emigration Act (V of 1837), which also provided that contracts should be determinable after 5 years.

History of Emigration.—Under the above Act emigration during 1837 was permitted to Mauritius, British Guiana and Australia

(39 men, the first and last direct emigrants to Australia). In 1838 emigration was suspended owing to agitation in England regarding the abuses to which the system was liable, and a committee of enquiry reported in 1840 that emigrants were being entrapped by force or fraud, robbed of their wages and treated with brutality. In consequence, emigration was prohibited (Act XV of 1842) except to Mauritius and there control was tightened. In Act XXI of 1844 emigration under still stricter regulation was allowed to Jamaica, British Guiana and Trinidad. Act XIII of 1847 removed the restrictions on emigration to Ceylon. The emancipation of slaves in the French colonies in 1849 gave rise to a system of emigration from French Indian ports to Reunion and Bourbon which was largely based on crimping in British territory. This practice was checked by Act XXIV of 1852. In 1858 emigration was opened to St. Lucia, and in 1860 to St. Vincent, Natal and St. Kitts. In the latter year a more elaborate Act, based on a convention with the French Government was passed legalising and regulating emigration to Reunion, Martinique, Guadeloupe, and French Guiana. Act XIII of 1864 marks an important stage in the history of emigration, since it elaborated and consolidated the whole system of control. It was itself amended in 1869 and 1870 in important respects with the object of preventing epidemics on emigrant vessels and improving sanitary conditions in settlements. In 1869 emigration was permitted to Grenada, and in 1872 to Surinam. Owing to the removal of the Straits Settlements from the control of the Government of India in 1867, emigration to that colony came under all the restrictions imposed by the Emigration Act and was only permitted from the port of Negapatam. Owing to the injury caused to the agricultural industries of the colony, these restrictions were removed in 1872, subject only to magisterial control of recruitment in India. In 1870 complaints reached the Government of India of gross abuses in the treatment of emigrants in British Guiana. A commission of enquiry was appointed, and their report led to important legislation in the colony for the protection of Indian immigrants which was subsequently extended to Trinidad. Owing to similar complaints from Natal and Mauritius, commissions of enquiry were also instituted in both these colonies, and their reports in 1872 brought to light a number of points requiring amendment.

Recent Legislation.—In 1871 a fresh consolidating Act was passed (Act VII of 1871), by which the Acts regulating emigration to the French Colonies and two amending Acts to Act XIII of 1864 were incorporated in the general law. The question of revision of the law again came up for consideration in 1882, when several cases of kidnapping and other objectionable practices were reported to the Government of India. The opportunity was taken to depute two officials (Major Pitcher and Mr. Grierson) to ascertain, in the N. W. P. and in Bengal respectively, the way in which the system of recruitment actually worked, the respects in which it was open to improvement, and the attitude of the people towards emigration. Their reports were reviewed by the Government of India, and finally in 1883 the law was again recast and consolidated by Act XXI of that year. This Act specified the countries to which emigration is lawful, but empowers the Governor-General in Council to add to the list by notification, and also to prohibit emigration to any of the countries in the list on the ground of epidemic disease and/or excessive mortality among emigrants in such country, or on the ground that proper measures have not been taken for the protection of emigrants, or that the agreements made with them in India are not duly enforced. This Act with certain amendments of no importance to the system of indentured emigration remained in force until 1908, when a fresh revision of the law was undertaken.

Under the Act of 1908 (XVII of 1908) the countries to which emigration was lawful were the British Colonies of Mauritius, Jamaica, British Guiana, Trinidad, St. Lucia, Grenada, St. Vincent, Natal, St. Kitts, Nevis, Fiji, the Seychelles, the Netherlands Colony of Dutch Guiana and the Danish Colony of St. Croix. Emigration to St. Lucia, Grenada, St. Vincent, St. Kitts, Nevis, the Seychelles and St. Croix ceased soon after the passing of the Act, the demand for fresh labour having died out. Emigration to Natal was discontinued from the 1st July 1911 as the Government of India were satisfied that it was undesirable to continue to send Indian labour to that country. Emigration to the French Colonies of Reunion, Martinique and Guadeloupe had been suspended prior to the passing of the Act of 1908 on account of repeated complaints of the inadequate precautions taken for the proper treatment and repatriation of the immigrants.

The labour laws of the several Colonies provide for the protection and welfare of resident Indian labourers. The Government of India also occasionally depute to the colonies their officers to report on the condition of Indian labourers. Deputations from India visited Fiji and British Guiana in 1921. In spite of all precautions certain social and moral evils had grown up in connection with the indentured system of emigration and Indian public opinion has during the last decade been strongly opposed to it. The whole system was exhaustively examined by the Government of India in 1915 in the light of the report received from Messrs. McNeill and Chimanlal and they arrived at the conclusion that the time has come when contract labour should be abolished. The Secretary of State for India accepted this policy and authorised the Government of India to announce the abolition of the indentured system and the announcement to this effect was made in 1916.

In 1922 a further step forward was taken in Act VII of 1922 which prohibited indentured emigration and all unskilled emigration, except to countries specially approved by the Legislature. Emigration to Ceylon and Malaya was brought under control, and the definition of "Emigrant" was extended to cover all persons "assisted" to depart from India.

It was found that the lack of power to regulate the total flow of emigration for unskilled work, whether assisted or voluntary and whether under contract or not, may operate to the detriment of Indian communities overseas, particularly in times of economic depression. The Indian Emigration Act was suitably amended in 1938 and the Government of India took power, to prohibit, when necessary, even unassisted emigration for the purpose of unskilled work. This amendment was promulgated on December 14, 1939. The rules have been made applicable in the first instance to the Province of Bombay where the problem of illicit emigration was found to exist in appreciable proportions. Under the new rules the passage broker is precluded from recovering or being a party to any arrangement to recover the "cost of recruitment" from the emigrant.

During 1939-40 two minor defects in the Indian Emigration Act, 1932 were remedied by the Indian Emigration Act, 1940. This Act empowers Protectors of Emigrants to exercise the powers of detention, search, etc., for the prevention of offences under the Act and by making the offence under Section 30 of the Act cognizable, removes an anomaly between Sections 35 and 30A of the Act.

Present Position.—Indian emigration questions have recently taken on a wider aspect. The status of Indians in the Empire generally is one in which the Indian public now take keen interest. It is no longer possible to deal with the treatment of Indian labour apart from other classes of Indian emigrants and travellers. In several colonies and dominions considerable Indian communities have sprung up, which although composed largely of the descendants of indentured labourers, are themselves free and lawfully domiciled citizens of the countries in which they are settled, but have not yet been placed on a footing of legal, social, political and economic equality with the rest of the population. The issues round which public interest at present centres are three:—

- (a) Control of emigration.
- (b) Rights of Indians to admission to other parts of the Empire.

(c) Rights and disabilities of Indians domiciled overseas.

These questions may be considered separately.

Control of Emigration.—So far as unskilled labour is concerned, the Government of India have assumed absolute powers of control. The terms of section 10 of the Emigration Act of 1922 are as follows:—

"10. (1) Emigration, for the purpose of unskilled work, shall not be lawful except to such countries and on such terms and conditions as the Governor-General in Council, by notification in the Gazette of India, may specify in this behalf.

"(2) No Notification shall be made under sub-section (1) unless it has been laid in draft before both Chambers of the Indian Legislature and has been approved by a resolution of each Chamber, either without modification or addition, or with modifications and additions to which both Chambers agree, but, upon such approval being given, the notification may be issued in the form in which it has been so approved."

Under this law emigration has been legalised to Ceylon on the following conditions:

- (1) The emigrant shall—
 - (a) have been recruited by a person licensed for that purpose by and responsible to an officer (hereinafter called the Emigration Commissioner) appointed by the Government of Ceylon, or
 - (b) have applied direct to the Emigration Commissioner for an assisted passage and have been accepted by him.
- (2) The emigrant shall not, before leaving British India, have entered into a contract of service for a period exceeding one month.
- (3) Within six months from the issue of this Notification, or within such further period as the Governor-General in Council may by notification appoint, the Legislature of Ceylon shall have enacted that any contract of service for a period exceeding one month entered into by an emigrant shall be void.
- (4) No part of the cost of his recruitment, subsistence during transport, or transport shall be recoverable from any emigrant and all expenses in this connection shall be defrayed from a common fund to be raised in such manner and managed by such agency as may appear suitable to the Colonial Government.
- (5) The Government of Ceylon shall at any time when so desired by the Governor-General in Council admit and give all facilities to an Agent appointed under section 7 of the Act.
- (6) Within one year of his arrival in Ceylon any emigrant who has been assisted to emigrate at the cost of the common fund referred to in clause (4) shall, on satisfying the Agent appointed under section 7 of the Act that his return to his home is desirable either on the ground of the state of his health or on the ground that the work which he is required to do is unsuitable to his capacity, or that he has been unjustly treated by his employer, or for any other sufficient reason, be repatriated free of cost to the place of recruitment, and the costs of such repatriation shall be defrayed by the Government of Ceylon or the Ceylon Planters Association.

(7) If at any time there is no Agent appointed under section 7 of the Act, the Government of Ceylon shall appoint a person to perform the duties of the Agent as set forth in clause (6).

(8) Within six months from the issue of this Notification, or within such further period as the Governor-General in Council may by notification appoint, the Legislature of Ceylon shall have enacted that no payment made in India by a recruiter to an emigrant to enable him to pay off debts before emigrating shall be recoverable.

(9) The Government of Ceylon shall furnish such periodical reports and returns as may be required from time to time by the Government of India in respect of the welfare of persons emigrating to Ceylon in accordance with this Notification.

Similar conditions have been imposed in the case of Malaya. Emigration was also permitted to Mauritius for a period of 1 year only with effect from May 1st, 1923, and limited to a number not exceeding 1,500 labourers. The terms were more onerous than in the case of nearer Colonies and the arrangement has now lapsed.

Emigration to British Guiana for the purpose of unskilled work has also been declared lawful on the terms and conditions given below, but the date from which emigration is to commence has not yet been fixed:—

Emigration to British Guiana.—Emigration to British Guiana for the purpose of unskilled work shall be lawful with effect from such date as the Governor-General in Council may with the concurrence of the Governor of British Guiana notify in the Gazette of India on the following terms and conditions, which shall thereupon become operative:—

(1) The family shall be the unit for the purposes of emigration. Not more than 500 families shall be permitted to emigrate and the number of persons included in the said 500 families shall not exceed 1,500.

(2) The emigrants shall either have been recruited by a person licensed for that purpose by and responsible to an officer (hereinafter called the Emigration Commissioner) appointed by the Government of British Guiana, or have applied direct to the Emigration Commissioner for an assisted passage and have been accepted by him.

(3) No part of the cost of his recruitment or subsistence during transport shall be recoverable from any emigrant and all expenses in this connection shall be borne by the Government of British Guiana or met from funds at their disposal.

(4) The Government of British Guiana shall at any time when so desired by the Governor-General in Council, admit and give all facilities to an Agent appointed under section 7 of the Act.

(5) If at any time there is no Agent appointed under section 7 of the Act, or if the Agent is absent or unable to perform his duties, the Government of British Guiana shall at the request of the Governor-General in Council appoint a person to perform temporarily the duties of the Agent.

(6) Prior to the arrival of the emigrants a Settlement Commission shall be appointed in British Guiana to select and prepare suitable agricultural land for the emigrants and generally to supervise their employment. The Agent referred to in clause (4) shall, on appointment, be a member of such Commission.

(7) The Government of British Guiana shall offer to each family for its separate enjoyment a holding comprising not less than five acres of suitable agricultural land prepared for cultivation on the terms hereinafter set out in a locality which shall be healthy and shall have an adequate supply of good drinking water. All expenses in connection with the preparation of the holdings shall be borne by the Government of British Guiana and shall in no case be recoverable from an emigrant.

The annual rent of the holding shall be fixed by the Settlement Commission at a rate not exceeding the lowest rate paid in the locality.

After an emigrant has been in occupation of a holding for three years, he shall, provided that he has cultivated a portion of the holding either by himself or through some member of his family, be entitled to a grant of the holding on payment at any time during the ensuing four years of such fees not exceeding 24 dollars as may be fixed by the Settlement Commission.

On the expiry of seven years from the date of the commencement of his occupation of a holding an emigrant shall acquire absolute ownership in the holding provided that he has paid the rent and fees referred to in the foregoing paragraphs of this clause and has brought under cultivation either by himself or by some member of his family half the area of his holding.

(8) An emigrant on arrival in British Guiana shall be housed and maintained without charge by the Government of British Guiana for at least one month.

(9) If any emigrant so requires loans shall be made to him for maintenance, house accommodation, payment of rent and for agricultural purposes generally. Free medical assistance and free skilled supervision shall be provided.

(10) Any emigrant shall be entitled to repatriation at the expense of the Government of British Guiana to the place of his former residence in India on the expiry of 7 years from the date of his arrival in British Guiana.

Any emigrant shall be entitled to repatriation at the expense of the Government of British Guiana to the place of his former residence in India on the expiry of more than 3 and not more than 5 years from the date of his arrival in British Guiana on payment to the Government of British Guiana of half of the cost of his passage from his residence in India to British Guiana.

Any emigrant shall be entitled to repatriation at the expense of the Government of British Guiana to the place of his former residence in India on the expiry of more than 5 and not more than 7 years from the date of his arrival in British Guiana on payment to the Government of British Guiana of quarter of the cost of his passage from his residence in India to British Guiana.

(11) Notwithstanding anything contained in the last preceding clause the Government of British Guiana on the request of an Agent appointed under section 7 of the Act shall repatriate at its own expense and without any payment by or on behalf of the emigrant to the place of his former residence in India any emigrant at any time after his arrival in British Guiana.

(12) An emigrant shall be at liberty at any time after his arrival in British Guiana to take up work or employment other than or in addition to the cultivation of a holding on lease from the Settlement Commission.

(13) The ordinance enjoining compulsory education in British Guiana shall be enforced to the same extent in the case of Indian children as in the case of children belonging to other communities.

(14) Boards of arbitration in regard to wages shall be established before the arrival of the emigrants and Indians shall be adequately represented on such boards.

(15) Any Indian who has emigrated to British Guiana before the date of this notification and under any agreement in force at the date of this notification is entitled to an assisted return passage to India shall not be required to pay more than 25 per cent. of the excess in the cost of his return passage and clothing over the cost of such passage and clothing at the time of his first arrival in the colony.

(16) Any Indian who has emigrated to British Guiana before the date of this notification and has at the date of this notification become or thereafter becomes destitute shall be entitled to be repatriated to India at the expense of the Government of British Guiana without being further required to prove that he has become incapable of labour.

(17) The Government of British Guiana shall furnish such periodical reports and returns as may be required from time to time by the Government of India in respect of the welfare of the persons emigrating to the Colony in accordance with this notification.

Admission of Indians to Other Parts of the Empire.—On the motion of the Government of India this question was discussed at the Imperial War Conferences, 1917 and 1918, and the policy accepted by the self-governing dominions and the British Government was embodied in the following resolutions:—

"(1) It is an inherent function of the Governments of the several communities of the British Commonwealth including India, that each should enjoy complete control of the composition of its own population by means of restriction on immigration from any of the other communities.

"(2) British citizens domiciled in any British country, including India, should be admitted into any other British country for visits, for the purpose of pleasure or commerce, including temporary residence for the purpose of education; such right shall not extend to a visit or temporary residence for labour purposes or to permanent settlement.

"(3) Indians already permanently domiciled in the other British countries should be allowed to bring in their wives and minor children on condition: (a) That not more than one wife and her children shall be admitted for each such Indian; and (b) that each individual so admitted shall be certified by the Government of India as being the lawful wife or child of such Indian."

The first paragraph of this resolution has regularized the various restrictions on immigration which the self-governing dominions have, from time to time, adopted and which, without expressly differentiating against Indians are in practice used in order to check Indian immigration, the objections to which are stated to be not racial or political but economic. Australia prohibits the entry of any person who fails to pass a dictation test of not less than 50 words in any prescribed language. New Zealand prohibits the entry of any person who has not received in advance a permit from the Dominion Government which is refused to any person regarded as unsuitable to settle in the country. South Africa prohibits the entry of any person deemed by the Minister of the Interior on economic grounds or on account of his standard or habits of life to be unsuited to the requirements of the Union. Canada prohibited the landing of any person who had come to the Dominion otherwise than by continuous journey from the country of which he was a native and unless he possessed in his own right $250 dollars. Since 1930, Canada has restricted the immigration of Indians to the wife or unmarried child under 18 years of age, of any Canadian citizen legally admitted to and resident in Canada, who is in a position to receive and care for his dependents. Newfoundland and the Irish Free State impose no restrictions. All the self-governing Dominions have adopted special exemptions in favour of students, tourists and merchants visiting the countries for the temporary purposes of commerce, pleasure, or education. India on its side has assumed power to regulate the admission of immigrants from any other part of the Empire or foreign countries, by means of passports. A bill has also been passed by the Indian Legislature empowering the Government of India to make rules "for the purpose of securing that persons not being of Indian origin, domiciled in any British possession, shall have no greater rights and privileges as regards entry into and residence in British India, than are accorded by the law and administration of such possession to persons of Indian domicile." With regard to the Crown colonies and protectorates, the attitude of the Indian Government is that there is no justification for placing any restrictions on the immigration of British Indians, which are not placed on other classes of British subjects, and this principle has in practice been observed by the Colonial Office except in the case of Kenya colony where, as stated hereafter, the British Government has reserved to itself the right to impose restrictions on the immigration of classes of people whose entry into the colony may have an adverse effect on the economic evolution of the indigenous population.

Rights and Disabilities of Indians Lawfully Domiciled Overseas.—The policy of the Empire is summed up in the resolution of the Imperial Conference, 1921, which was recorded in the following terms:—

"This Conference reaffirms that each Community of the British Commonwealth should enjoy complete control over the composition of its own population by restricting immigration from any of the other communities, but recognises that there is incongruity between the position of India, as an equal member of the Empire, and the existence of disabilities upon British Indians lawfully domiciled in some parts of the Empire, and this Conference, therefore, is of opinion that in the interests of the solidarity of the Commonwealth it is desirable that the rights or such Indians to citizenship should be recognised."

"The representatives of South Africa regret their inability to accept this resolution in view of the exceptional circumstances of the greater part of the Union. The representatives of India while appreciating the acceptance of this resolution, nevertheless feel bound to record their profound concern at the position of Indians in South Africa and hope that by negotiations between India and South Africa a way can be found as soon as may be to reach a more satisfactory position."

Summary of present Position.—Outside Australia, New Zealand and Canada the position stands as follows:—

(1) South Africa—The main grievances of Indians, which led to a passive resistance movement headed by Mr. Gandhi, were settled by the compromise embodied in the Indians Relief Act, 1914 and by the guarantee known as the Smuts-Gandhi agreement. The substance of this agreement is embodied in the following extracts from letters:—

(i) Mr. Gorges, Secretary for the Interior, to Mr. Gandhi, June 30th, 1914: "With regard to the administration of existing laws, the Minister desires me to say that it always has been, and will continue to be, the desire of the Government to see that they are administered in a just manner and with due regard to vested rights."

(ii) Mr. Gandhi to Mr. Gorges, July 7th, 1914: "By vested rights I understand the right of an Indian and his successors to live and trade in the township in which he was living and trading, no matter how often he shifts his residence or business from place to place in the same township."

This has been officially interpreted to mean "that the vested rights of those Indians who were then living and trading in townships, whether in contravention of the law or not should be respected."

In 1929 an Asiatic Enquiry Commission was appointed to investigate the grievances of Indians regarding their rights to trade and hold land in the Union. Their main recommendations were as follows:—

(1) Law 3 of 1885 (Transvaal), the Gold Law of the Transvaal (Act No. 35 of 1908) and Act No. 37 of 1919 should not be repealed.

(2) There should be no compulsory repatriation of Asiatics; but

(3) Voluntary repatriation should be encouraged.

(4) There should be no compulsory segregation of Asiatics; but

(5) A system of voluntary separation should be introduced under which municipalities should have right, subject to certain conditions:—

(a) to lay out residential areas for Asiatics;
(b) to set aside certain streets or portions of the town for Asiatic traders to which existing license holders should gradually be attracted

(6) These areas should be selected and allocated by a board of independent persons in consultation with the Municipal Council and Asiatic community.

(7) In Natal the right of Asiatics to acquire and own land for farming or agricultural purposes, outside townships, should be confined to the coast belt, say, 20 to 30 miles inland.

(8) A uniform "License Law" applicable to all the Provinces of the Union should be possible, be enacted. If that is impracticable, the law relating to the issue of Trade Licenses in the Cape Province, the Transvaal and Natal should be assimilated in a comprehensive consolidating Act of Parliament providing, inter alia :—

(a) That the granting of all licenses to trade (not being liquor licenses) shall be entrusted to municipal bodies within the area of their jurisdiction; outside those areas, to divisional Councils in the Cape Province, and in the other Provinces to special Licensing Officers appointed by the Administrator.

(b) The grounds upon which an application for the grant of a new license may be refused.

(c) That the reasons for the refusal to grant any license shall be recorded, together with any evidence tendered for or against the application.

(d) That, in the case of the refusal of a license on the ground that the applicant is not a fit and proper person to hold the same or to carry on the proposed business, there shall be a final appeal to a Special Appeal Board, appointed by the Administrator.

(e) That municipal bodies shall have the right to prohibit the license holder, or any other person, from residing in any shop, store or other place of business.

(9) There should be no relaxation in the enforcement of the Immigration Laws, and more active steps should be taken to deal with prohibited immigrants who have evaded the provisions of those laws.

(10) The administration of the Asiatic policy of the Government should be placed in the hands of one official, under whose charge would come all administrative functions, together with the official records relating to Asiatics. This officer should also be entrusted with the duty of securing full statistics regarding Asiatics in the Union and of the arrivals in and departures from South Africa. Details of all applications for trade licenses, and transactions in connection with the purchase of land and property made by Asiatics throughout the Union, should be sent to him in order to ensure the enforcement of the provisions of Section 8 of Act 22 of 1913.

On the other hand, he should keep in close touch with the various sections of the Indian community, see that the laws are applied in a just manner, give a ready ear to any complaints or grievances and generally safeguard their interests.

From the above it will be observed that the Commission recommended the retention of a law prohibiting the ownership of land by Asiatics in the Transvaal, and another of its recommen-datums, threatened the right which Indians had previously enjoyed of acquiring and owning land in the Uplands of Natal. Against this latter proposal the Government of India earnestly protested, but the protest was not accepted by the Union Government.

As has been stated above, the representatives of the Union of South Africa discussed from the resolution of the Imperial Conference of 1921 which recommended the recognition of the right of Indians to citizenship in the self-governing Dominions. The negotiations conducted by the Union Government, however, had little result. The following is a summary of the following years.

Between 1922 and 1925 the Durban Land Alienation Ordinance, the Borough and Township Land Ordinance, the Natal Borough Ordinance (No. 19 of 1924) and the Natal Townships Ordinance of 1925 were all passed and were detrimental to Indian interests. In 1925 the Areas Reservation, Immigration and Registration (Further Provision) Bill was introduced in the Union Parliament, the object of the Bill being to stiffen the immigration law in its application to Asiatics and to introduce segregation in Natal. The Bill aroused consternation in South Africa and widespread resentment in India. After prolonged negotiations between the two Governments, the Union Government agreed to a conference between the representatives of the two Governments and to the postponement of the consideration of the Areas Reservation Bill until after the conference. The Conference met in Cape Town and arrived at an understanding, commonly known as the Cape Town Agreement of 1927. The terms of this agreement, which were ratified by both Governments in February, 1927, are reproduced below.

Cape Town Agreement 1927

1. It was announced in April 1926 that the Government of India and the Government of the Union of South Africa had agreed to hold a Round Table Conference to explore all possible methods of settling the Indian question in the Union in a manner which would safeguard the maintenance of western standards of life in South Africa by just and legitimate means. The Conference assembled at Cape Town on December 17th and its session finished on January 12th. There was, in these meetings, a full and frank exchange of views which has resulted in a truer appreciation of mutual difficulties and a united understanding to co-operate in the solution of a common problem in a spirit of friendliness and good-will.

Both Governments re-affirm their recognition of the right of South Africa to use all just and legitimate means for the maintenance of western standards of life.

2. The Union Government recognises that Indians domiciled in the Union who are prepared to conform to western standards of life, should be enabled to do so.

3. For those Indians in the Union who may desire to avail themselves of it, the Union Government will organise a scheme of assisted emigration to India or other countries where western standards are not required. Union domicile will be lost after 3 years' continuous absence from the Union in agreement with the proposed revision of the law relating to domicile which will be of general application. Emigrants under the assisted emigration scheme who desire to return to the Union within the 3 years will only be allowed to do so on refund to the Union Government of the cost of the assistance received by them.

4. The Government of India recognise their obligation to look after such emigrants on their arrival in India.

5. The admission into the Union of the wives and minor children of Indians permanently domiciled in the Union will be regulated by paragraph 3 of Resolution XXI of the Imperial Conference of 1918.

6. In the expectation that the difficulties with which the Union has been confronted will be materially lessened by the agreement now happily reached between the two Governments, and in order that the agreement may come into operation under the most favourable auspices and have a fair trial, the Government of the Union of South Africa have decided not to proceed further with the Areas Reservation and Immigration and Registration (Further Provision) Bill.

7. The two Governments have agreed to watch the working of the agreement now reached and to exchange views from time to time as to any changes that experience may suggest.

8. The Government of the Union of South Africa have requested the Government of India to appoint an agent in order to secure continuous and effective co-operation between the two Governments.

In February, 1930, a Select Committee of the Union House of Assembly was appointed to inquire into and report on certain matters relating to the rights of Indians to own and occupy immovable property in the Transvaal and incidentally to trade. The Committee was required inter alia, to investigate how far the intentions of the legislature, as embodied in the Act of 1919, were being given effect to and whether, and, if so, to what extent, an amendment of the Act was desirable. The Committee came to the conclusion that the position which had arisen as a result of illegal occupation in the mining areas was serious and that there was no doubt that Law 3 of 1885, as amended by the Act of 1919, intended that Asiatics should not own fixed property in the Transvaal outside reserved areas either individually or collectively and either directly or indirectly. It submitted its report on the 13th May, 1930, and embodied its recommendations in a Bill, which it urged should be enacted immediately. The Bill was read for the first time on the 14th May, 1930, but in deference to the representations made by the Government of India that adequate time should be allowed for careful examination of the far-reaching provisions of the measure, the Union Government decided to defer further consideration of it until the Parliamentary session of 1931. As a result of opposition to the Bill, it was later postponed further, and a Conference was held in 1932 to examine the provisions of the Bill and to review the working of the Cape Town Agreement of 1927 in accordance with para 7 of that Agreement.

The results of the Conference are contained in the following extracts from a statement made in the Indian Legislature on the 5th April, 1932.—

1. In accordance with paragraph 7 of the Cape Town Agreement of 1927 delegates of the Government of the Union of South Africa and of the Government of India met at Cape Town from January 12th to February 4th, 1932 to consider the working of the Agreement and to exchange views as to any modifications that experience might suggest. The delegates had a full and frank discussion in the Conference, which was throughout marked by a spirit of cordiality and mutual good-will.

2. Both Governments consider that the Cape Town Agreement has been a powerful influence in fostering friendly relations between them and that they should continue to co-operate in the common object of harmonising their respective interests in regard to Indians resident in the Union.

3. It was recognised that the possibilities of the Union's scheme of assisted emigration to India are now practically exhausted owing to the economic and climatic conditions of India as well as to the fact that 80 per cent. of the Indian population of the Union are now South-African-born. As a consequence the possibilities of land-settlement outside India, as already contemplated in paragraph 3 of the Agreement, have been further considered. The Government of India will co-operate with the Government of the Union in exploring the possibilities of a colonisation scheme for settling Indians, both from India and from South Africa, in other countries. In this investigation, which should take place during the course of the present year a representative of the Indian community in South Africa will, if they so desire, be associated. As soon as the investigation has been completed the two Governments will consider the results of the inquiry.

4. No other modification of the Agreement is for the present considered necessary.

5. I shall now endeavour to deal with the Transvaal Asiatic Tenure (Amendment) Bill. The Conference decided that it should be considered by a sub-committee consisting of two representatives of each Delegation. After discussion in the sub-committee Dr. Malan, who was one of Union representatives, agreed to place informally before members of the Select Committee, which had prepared Bill, suggestions of the delegates from India. Results of this consultation may be summarised as follows —

(1) Clause 5 of the Bill which embodied the principle of segregation by providing for the ear-marking of areas for the occupation or ownership of land by Asiatics has been deleted. Instead, the Gold Law is to be amended to empower the Minister of the Interior after consultation with the Minister of Mines to withdraw any land from the operation of sections 130 and 131 in so far as they prohibit residence upon or occupation of any land by coloured persons. This power will be exercised after inquiry into individual cases by an impartial commission presided over by a judge to validate present illegal occupations and to permit exceptions to be made in future from occupational restrictions of Gold Law. It is hoped that liberal use will be made of this new provision of the law so as to prevent the substantial dislocation of Indian business which strict application of the existing restrictions would involve, and to provide Indians in future with reasonable facilities to trade in the mining areas without segregation.

(2) The Bill has also been amended so as to protect fixed property acquired by Asiatic companies up to 1st March 1930 which are not protected by section 2 of Act 47 of 1919. This will have the effect of saving many Indian properties which, though not acquired in contravention of the letter of the Act of 1919 were acquired contrary to its spirit.

(3) Local bodies whom clause 10 of the Bill required to issue certificates of fitness to an Asiatic to trade on the ground that the applicant may not lawfully carry on business on the premises for which the licence is sought, shall have to treat a certificate issued by a competent Government officer to the effect that any land has been withdrawn from the restrictive provisions of sections 130 and 131 of the Gold Law as sufficient proof that a coloured person may lawfully trade on such land. As it is proposed to maintain hereafter a register of all lands in proclaimed areas where Asiatic occupation is permitted, such a provision should prove a valuable safeguard to the Indian community.

6. As against these important concessions, it has to be recognised that the recommendations of the Indian Delegation that areas like Springs and de-proclaimed land, to which the restrictions of clauses 130 and 131 do not at present apply should not be made subject to them, and that leases for ten years or more should not be treated as fixed property have not been accepted. On the balance, however, the amendments which, subject to ratification by the Union Parliament, have been made in the Bill represent a substantial advance on the original Bill.

The Transvaal Asiatic Land Tenure Bill, as amended in the manner mentioned in paragraphs 6 and 7 of the statement above, was passed into law in 1932 and a Commission, presided over by the Honourable Mr. Justice Feetham, was appointed in October, 1932, to enquire into the occupation by coloured persons of proclaimed land in the Transvaal. The Transvaal Asiatic Land Tenure (Amendment) Act of 1936, which was passed after completion of the recommendations of the Feetham Commission, completed the legislation necessary to give effect to the policy of the original Act of 1932.

The Government of the Union of South Africa also appointed a Committee to undertake the investigation of the possibilities of colonisation contemplated in the 1932 Agreement referred to above. The report of this Committee was published simultaneously in India and in South Africa on the 2nd July, 1934. The main recommendation of the Committee was that thorough investigation in regard to the special opportunities of colonisation should be advantageously made by a joint commission in British North Borneo, British New Guinea and British Ceylon. The idea of colonising Indians from the Union, however, does not appear to have been proceeded with.

Since 1932, there have also been several enactments which are capable of being used against Indians in the Union, e.g., the Transvaal Licence (Control) Ordinance of 1932 and the Natal Rural Dealers' Licensing Law Amendment Ordinance of 1935. A further development occurred in 1937 when three private Bills affecting the position of Indians in the Union were introduced in the Union Parliament. The first sought to prohibit marriages between Europeans and Asiatics or natives. It was introduced on the 12th January but attempts to have it referred to a Select Committee failed. The second Bill sought to empower Provincial Councils to prohibit the employment of Europeans by non-Europeans in the Union and the third to prohibit the acquisition of fixed property in the Transvaal by any European, Coloured or Cape Malay women married to Asiatics and by children of such marriages. Both the Government of India and their Agent General in the Union made representations against these two Bills. Second reading, which would have involved acceptance of the principle of the two measures, was not proceeded with and they were referred to a Select Committee of the Union House of Assembly for investigation of their contents and form. Both the Indian community and the Agent General gave evidence before the Select Committee. The Committee came to no conclusion on the proposal to restrict ownership of land through marriage, but after consideration of the other Bill, submitted an amended Bill entitled the White Women's Employment Restriction Bill. The amended Bill sought to prohibit the employment of European women by Asiatics except under a certificate of the Minister of Labour, and to forbid the issue of such a certificate if the women concerned were to be under the direction or supervision of a non-European or to be housed or employed on premises containing dwelling or sleeping quarters of Asiatics or at places where they might come into contact with Asiatics other than as customers over the counter. Cape Malays and Japanese (while the trade convention with Japan lasted) were to be exempted from the restriction. The new measure was purely anti-Indian and the Government of India protested strongly against it. In the course of oral evidence before the Select Committee, a representative of the South African Indian Congress stated that he believed Indians would be willing to forgo employment of European women voluntarily where circumstances showed that particular exception might be, or had been, justifiably taken to such employment. The Union Government accepted this statement as an assurance of co-operation by the Indian community in objectionable cases and an announcement was made on the 14th April in the Union House of Assembly that no further opportunity would be given for the discussion or for legislation in connection with the Select Committee's report on the Bills. The Union Government, however, reserved the right to under-take legislation later should circumstances demand it. The dropping of these two Bills did not, however, satisfy certain sections and an announcement was made in the Union Parliament on the 17th May, 1937, that two Commissions, one to enquire into mixed marriages and the other into the question of Asiatic land tenure in areas not covered by the enquiry of the Fetham Commission would be appointed. These commissions were appointed in February, 1938. The local Indian community and the Agent General in the Union gave both written and oral evidence before the Commissions. The Mixed Marriages Commission has not as yet reported and its findings are not likely to be of much practical importance to the local Indians, as such information as is available goes to show that mixed marriages are very rare among Indians in South Africa. The Land Commission reported towards the end of March, 1939 and its recommendations were generally considered to be satisfactory from the Indian point of view.

In spite of repeated representations from the local Indian community and the Government of India, the Union Government, passed the Asiatic (Transvaal Land and Trading) Act 1939 which came into force on June 16, 1939. The Act restricts three important rights of the Indian community in the Transvaal: (a) the right to occupy land not subject to Gold Law restrictions, (b) the right to trade anywhere in the Transvaal, and (c) the right of Indians holding trading licences in May 1919 to transfer their business premises in the same township. The main provisions of the Act are as follows: (1) Further protection for two years was granted to such illegal occupation of land by Asiatics in the area under the Gold Law as had been protected since May 1919; (2) the issue of trading licences except with the permission of the Minister was prohibited unless it was proved that the applicant and the person in control of the business were not Asiatics; (3) The lining of occupation by Asiatics of any land or premises was prohibited if such land or premises were not occupied by Asiatics or coloured persons on April 30, 1939; (4) The Minister was empowered to issue permits of exemption.

The international situation in September 1939 and the consequent change of Ministry in the Union altered the position slightly so far as the Indian community was concerned. It was officially announced that the Government of the Union intended to appoint a commission to ascertain whether penetration had in fact taken place. The Union Government also declared that no fresh statutory measures involving segregation would be introduced during the war.

It may be mentioned in this connection that the report of the Mixed Marriages Commission was published in August 1939. Four members of the Commission signed a majority report recommending that legislation should be passed prohibiting mixed marriages and that this legislation should be accompanied by other measures directed against illicit miscegenation. A minority report by one member stated that legislation was no solution of the problem and suggested immigration of young European women to South Africa in order to overcome the disparity between the European male and female population. In January 1940 Dr. Malan moved a resolution in the House of Assembly that steps should be taken to implement the recommended legislation. In reply the Minister of the Interior stated that as the country was in a state of war Government did not propose to embark upon contentious legislation touching difficult social conditions, sentiments and racial pride.

(2) Kenya Colony.—The grievances of Indians domiciled in this Colony are fully set forth in the published despatch of the Government of India, dated October 21st, 1920. The controversy centred round the following points:—

(a) FRANCHISE.—Indians have not the elective franchise. The Government of India proposed that there should be a common electoral roll and a common franchise on a reasonable property basis plus an educational test without racial discrimination for all British subjects.

(b) SEGREGATION.—Professor Simpson who was sent to East Africa to report on Sanitary matters, recommended segregation on sanitary grounds. The Government of India objected, firstly, that it was impracticable; secondly, that it was commercially inconvenient; and thirdly, that Indians are in practice unfairly treated in the allocation of sites.

(c) THE HIGHLANDS.—Lord Elgin decides in 1903 that as a matter of administrative convenience grants of land in the upland area should not be made to Indians. The whole area has now been given out, and the Government of India claim that there is no land left to which Lord Elgin's decision applies. This decision has now, however, been extended so as to prohibit the transfer of land in the uplands to non-Europeans.

(d) IMMIGRATION.—Suggestions have been put forward for restricting Asiatic immigration into Kenya. The Government of India claim that there is no case for restricting Indian immigration and that such restrictions would be in principle indefensible.

The Settlement.—The decisions of the British Government were contained in a White Paper presented to Parliament in July 1923. It was held that the guiding principle should be that "the interests of the African native must be paramount," and in light of this it was decided:—

(a) FRANCHISE.—A communal franchise was adopted with 11 seats for elected Europeans, 5 elected Indians, one nominated Arab, one missionary representing the Africans, and a nominated official majority. One Indian is also appointed on the Governor's Executive Council.

(b) SEGREGATION.—The policy of segregation as between Europeans and Asiatics is abandoned.

(c) THE HIGHLANDS.—The existing practice is maintained both as regards initial grants and transfers. A similar reservation in the lowlands is offered to Indians.

(d) IMMIGRATION.—Racial discrimination in immigration regulations is rejected. But in the economic interests of the Africans, further control over immigration is necessary. Some arrangement is required for securing a strictly impartial examination of applications for entry into Kenya. The Governors of Kenya and Uganda have been instructed to submit joint proposals for legislation.

The Government of India reviewed their decisions in a resolution published on August 18th, 1923, and recorded "their deep regret that His Majesty's Government did not feel justified in giving greater effect to the recommendations made by them" and reserved liberty to reopen the case on a suitable opportunity. They stated their intention of making representations regarding the action to be taken to implement these decisions, particularly in the matter of the Immigration regulations.

Following upon the Kenya award statutory action was taken by the local administration on the franchise question. Adult suffrage on communal lines was conferred upon Indians. As regards immigration, the Government of India took the opportunity to urge the postponement of the bill giving effect to the decision of His Majesty's Government until such time as the Committee proposed by their representatives at the Imperial conference in 1923 had an opportunity of examining the question of the restrictions therein embodied. Accordingly the introduction of the bill was postponed at the instance of the Colonial Secretary. The Government of Kenya was also asked by His Majesty's Government for an explanatory statement regarding the method proposed for the administration of immigration measures. The Government of India received an assurance from the Colonial Secretary that ample opportunities would be afforded for the expression of their views, and that earnest attention would be given to any representation which their Committee desired to make. As has already been stated such a Committee was appointed in March 1924. The following statement made by the Secretary of State for the Colonies in the House of Commons on 7th August 1924 shows the result of the representation made by the Colonies Committee:—

"(1) IMMIGRATION.—My position is that if danger ever arises of such an influx of immigrants, of whatever class, race, nationality or character, as may likely be prejudicial to the economic interest of the natives, I hold myself entirely free to take any action which may be necessary. Conflicting statistics which have been laid before me have not enabled me to reach a definite conclusion as regards the extent of net Indian immigration. Accordingly steps will be taken to create a statistical department to obtain accurate information with regard to persons of all races arriving in or departing from Kenya. Meanwhile the Kenya Immigration Ordinance will not be enacted.

(2) FRANCHISE.—I have given careful consideration to representations in favour of a common poll, but I am not prepared to resist the conclusion already arrived at that in the special circumstances of Kenya, with four diverse communities, each of which will ultimately require electoral representation, the communal system is the best way to secure the fair representation of each and all of these communities.

(3) HIGHLANDS.—I consider that the Secretary of State for the Colonies has no alternative but to continue pledges, expressed or implied, which had been given in the past, and I can hold out no hope of the policy in regard to agricultural land in the Highlands being reconsidered.

(4) LOWLANDS.—It was proposed to reserve an area in the lowlands for agricultural immigrants from India. The Committee made it plain that it is averse from any reservation of land for any immigrant race, subject to the suggestion that before application for land in lowland areas are invited an opportunity should be taken of sending an officer experienced in Indian settlement and agricultural methods to report on the areas. At present any consideration of the matter is in suspense pending receipt from the colony of reports from the native and agricultural points of view on the areas in question."

The work of the Colonies Committee did much to abate the bitterness which existed in the relations between the different classes of settlers in Kenya, and the situation was further improved by the decision of the Indian community to relinquish their attitude of non-cooperation and to select five members for nomination by the Governor to the Legislative Council.

In June 1924, His Majesty's Government announced the appointment of an East African Committee, under the Chairmanship of Lord Southborough, to consider and report on certain questions regarding the administration and economic development of British East African dependencies. Since this enquiry was likely to affect Indian interests, the Government of India urged that the Indian point of view should be heard before the Committee came to any conclusions. This request was granted, but further action in the matter was suspended, pending the publication of the report of the Commission presided over by Major Ormsby Gore, which visited East Africa to enquire into certain aspects of the questions referred to the Southborough Committee. The report of the Ormsby Gore Commission was published in the United Kingdom on May 7th, 1925. On June 9th, Major Ormsby Gore announced in the House of Commons that, in view of the completeness of the report presented by the Commission which, under his chairmanship, had visited East Africa, His Majesty's Government had decided that the Southborough Committee should not resume its sittings.

In November 1926, information reached the Government of India, that the Government of Kenya contemplated undertaking legislation at an early date in order to make the European and Indian communities responsible for the net cost of their education. It was originally intended to give effect to this decision by levying from Europeans a tax on domestic servants in their employ and from Indians a poll-tax. The Indian community resented this differentiation and, ultimately, the Colonial Government decided that both communities should pay the same form of tax, viz., an adult poll tax. For Europeans this has been fixed at 30 shillings and for Indians at 20 shillings. An Ordinance giving effect to this decision was passed by the Kenya Legislative Council and came into force from 1st January 1927.

Closer Union.—In view of the issue of another White Paper in July 1927, in which it was announced that His Majesty's Government had authorised the Secretary of State for the Colonies to send to Africa a special Commission to investigate the possibility of securing more effective co-operation between the Governments of Eastern and Central African Dependencies and make recommendations on this and cognate matters, the question regarding the position of Indians in Kenya again came to the forefront.

In March 1929, the Secretary of State for the Colonies sent out Sir Samuel Wilson, Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies, to East Africa to discuss the recommendations of the Hilton Young Commission for the closer union of Kenya, Tanganyika and Uganda (and such possible modification of these proposals for effecting the object in view as may appear desirable) with the Governments concerned and also with any bodies or individuals representing the various interests and communities affected, with a view to seeing how far it may be possible to find a basis of general agreement. Sir Samuel was also directed to ascertain on what lines a scheme for closer union would be administratively workable and otherwise acceptable and to report the outcome of his consultations. At the invitation of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Government of India deputed the Rt. Hon. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri, P.C., to East Africa to help the local Indian communities to state their views to Sir Samuel Wilson on matters arising out of the Hilton Young Commission's Report and to be at Sir Samuel Wilson's disposal, if he wished to make use of him in dealing with the Indian deputations.

Mr. Sastri left India in April and returned in June 1929. In the Report presented by him on his return he recommended that the Government of India should—

- (a) press for inquiries as to the basis of a civilisation franchise which shall be common to all races alike,
- (b) invoke the good offices of the Colonial Office and of the Government of Kenya in securing the consent of the European Community to the establishment of a common roll;
- (c) oppose the grant of responsible government to Kenya or of any institutions leading up to it;
- (d) oppose the establishment of a Central Council on the lines proposed by Sir Samuel Wilson;
- (e) demand, in case of the establishment of some such body that the unofficial representatives from each province should include an adequate number of Indians;
- (f) advocate the continuance of the official majority in the Legislative Council of Kenya;
- (g) demand that the representation of natives in the Kenya Legislative Council should be by natives or by Europeans and Indians in equal proportions.

Thereafter meetings of the Standing Emigration Committee were held and the decision arrived at by the Government of India was communicated to His Majesty's Government.

The report of Sir Samuel Wilson was published on the 5th October 1929. Another meeting of the Standing Emigration Committee was held soon thereafter to consider the report and a further communication was addressed to His Majesty's Government on the subject.

The conclusions of His Majesty's Government as regards closer union in East Africa were published in June, 1930, in the form of a White Paper and it was announced that they would be submitted to a Joint Committee of the two Houses of Parliament. In accordance with this decision a Select Committee was set up in November, 1930. The Government of India communicated their views in a despatch to the Secretary of State for India on the scheme set out in the White Paper in so far as it affected the Indian population in East Africa. With the permission of the Joint Select Committee of Parliament they also deputed the Right Honourable V. S. Srinivasa Sastri, P.C., C.H., as their representative to present their case and elucidate in the course of oral examination such questions as the Committee might consider necessary to refer to him. The Select Committee examined Mr. Sastri in July, 1931.

The report of the Committee was published simultaneously in England, East Africa and India on the 2nd November, 1931, and the decisions of His Majesty's Government on the recommendations of the Committee together with certain correspondence arising from the report of the Committee were also similarly published on the 24th August, 1932.

As regards the question of Closer Union, His Majesty's Government have accepted the view of the Joint Committee that apart from considerations arising out of the Mandatory position of the Tanganyika Territory, the time has not arrived for taking any far-reaching step in the direction of the formal Union of the several East African Dependencies.

There was no important development in regard to this question until 1935 when certain sections in Kenya attempted to revive the proposal for Closer Union. Early that year an unofficial conference of Europeans, held at Arusha, was reported to have expressed the view that since 1931 circumstances had changed so rapidly as to justify a reversal of the Joint Committee's decision and that immediate steps should be taken towards the Closer Union of East Africa. A "Memorandum on Union" was also forwarded to the Secretary of State for the Colonies by the European Elected Members' Organisation of the Kenya Legislative Council. His Majesty's Government did not, however, consider that there were adequate grounds for reopening an enquiry into the matters which had been so carefully investigated by the Joint Select Committee as recently as 1931. This decision is contained in Mr. Malcolm MacDonald's despatch, dated the 12th October, 1935, to His Excellency the Governor of Kenya which has been published in all the countries concerned.

Franchise.—As regards franchise, His Majesty's Government stated in the White Paper of 1930 that "His Majesty's Government are of the opinion that the establishment of a common roll is the object to be aimed at and attained, with an equal franchise of a civilization or education character open to all races." In 1931 the question of franchise was also referred to the Joint Select Committee of Parliament which was appointed to consider the question of Closer Union. After discussing the arguments that had been brought forward for and against a common electoral roll the Select Committee stated in para. 100 of their report that it would be impracticable under present conditions to advocate the adoption of the system of common roll representation in preference to the existing system of election. The Secretary of State for the Colonies accepted the recommendations of the Joint Select Committee in the matter.

Highlands.—The Joint Select Committee of Parliament which was appointed to consider the question of Closer Union in East Africa, had recommended that "in view of the nervousness among the native population as regards the land question, a full and authoritative inquiry should be undertaken immediately into the needs of the native population, present and prospective, with respect to land within or without the reserve held either on tribal or on individual tenure." In April, 1932 a Commission was accordingly appointed by His Majesty's Government and the terms of reference of the Commission included the following:

'To define the area known as the Highlands within which persons of European descent are to have a privileged position in accordance with the White Paper of 1923.'

The Commission in their report, which was published in May 1934, recommended that the boundaries of the European Highlands should be safeguarded by Order-in-Council so that the European community might have the same measure of security in regard to land as the Commission had recommended for the natives. His Majesty's Government announced that they accepted this recommendation of the Land Commission. The Indian community was perturbed by this announcement as the proposed Order-in-Council would give statutory effect to restrictions which were originally considered necessary on grounds of administrative convenience and representations were made to His Majesty's Government both by the Government of India and the local Indian community. No Order-in-Council had been promulgated till the end of 1937, but the position as it affects Indians appears clear from the following extracts from the speech of the Secretary of State for the Colonies made on the 9th July, 1936:—

'(a) What is contemplated, arising out of the recommendations of the (Molli-Carter) Commission, is the issue of two Orders-in-Council. There are, of course, many other things arising out of those recommendations, but the points which have been raised are chiefly concerned with these Orders-in-Council. One of them is to define the boundaries of those parts of the Highlands which are to be set aside for non-native occupation, and (b) I want to make it clear that there is to be nothing in either Order imposing any legal disability against Indians or against any persons on the ground of race, colour, creed or anything else. Equally I want to make it clear that the existing administrative practice which was first laid down by Lord Elgin is to be continued. I wish that to be understood clearly both in India and elsewhere. The existing administrative practice of the Kenya Government which has been followed since 1908 will continue. In the area demarcated as the European area not by law, not by anything in the Order-in-Council, but as a matter of administration that practice will continue in the future as in the past. There will be no legal colour bar.'

In spite of protests from the Government of India and the local Indian community, the Order-in-Council contemplated in the above announcement issued in February, 1939. Though the Order does not contain a definition of the 'privileged position' which persons of European descent are to have within the territorial limits to be included in the Highlands, His Majesty's Government have made it clear that there is no intention of changing the administrative practice which has been followed for many years with regard to alienation and transfer of land in the Highlands. This decision has caused profound disappointment to all sections of Indian opinion both in Kenya and in India, in particular because of the preference which it accords even to non-British subjects of European race.

Lowlands.—Subsequent to the announcement made in the House of Commons in 1924, in connection with the 'Lowlands,' the question of deputing an officer to examine these areas was considered by the Government of India who thought it inadvisable to proceed any further with the idea.

Apart from the major problems outlined above, other questions have also been causing concern to the Indian community in the colony. The most important of these are (i) the Ordinance to control and regulate the marketing of native Produce and (ii) the Transport Control Ordinance. The former Bill sought to regulate the selling and buying of native produce by such methods as limiting the number of licences and confining sales to specified localities so as to ensure control over quality. As a number of Indian traders were affected, representations were made to His Majesty's Government by the Government of India and the Bill was revised in certain respects and became law in 1935. It was brought into force from the 1st January, 1936.

The Kenya Transport Control Bill which was passed last year was intended to give effect to the recommendations of the Kenya Transport Coordination Committee which was appointed in 1935 to investigate and consider the desirability of co-ordinating and regulating all forms of transport in the colony. The Indian members of the Kenya Legislative Council objected to the principle of the Bill as in the attempt to prevent wasteful competition between the railways and other forms of transport in Kenya, they felt that the considerable interests of Indians in the transport industry would be affected adversely. The other main objections were directed against the composition of the Transport Licensing Board and the provision relating to the grant of exclusive licences. The Bill has now become law and an Indian has been appointed to the Transport Licensing Board.

In the latter half of 1938 and the beginning of 1939 the Kenya Indians were interested in (1) the Immigration of Jewish refugees, (2) the Kenya Immigration Restriction Ordinance and (3) the representation of the Indian community on the Kenya Immigration Board. All these three questions were connected with one another in some form. His Majesty's Government had under consideration a scheme for the settlement of a small number of Jews in the Kenya Highlands. The main objection of the Indian community was that it would accord to foreign subjects within a British colony privileges which are denied to British Indian subjects. As His Majesty's Government were committed to a policy of settling Jewish refugees from Central Europe it was not possible to meet the objections of the Indian community in the matter. To prevent an influx of destitute and undesirable foreigners into the Colony as a result of the international situation in Europe, an Immigration Advisory Board was established in October, 1938. The Board was to advise the Commissioner of Police on such matters as may be referred to it in connection with immigration into Kenya but it was not intended that it should consider or advise upon any aspect of Indian immigration. Nevertheless it was felt that the Indian community which is vitally interested in the composition of the population and the economic development of the Colony should be represented on the Board. Representations were made to His Majesty's Government in the matter and the result of the representations is awaited. The objections to the Kenya Immigration Restriction Bill centred round two provisions of the Bill—(a) the provision authorising the Immigration Officer to require any intending immigrant who is without any visible means of support or is likely to become a pauper, to give security by bond to an amount not exceeding £500, and (b) the provision altering the period of 12 months, within which an intending immigrant has to prove that he is not a prohibited immigrant, to any period the Immigration Officer may fix in his discretion. Though these clauses were intended to apply only to immigrants from Europe, the Indian community thought that they might at any time be applied to Indians also.

Both questions have been settled satisfactorily. Indian representation on the Board has now been conceded and under the revised provisions all immigrants are divided into two classes: (a) those who will if necessary be received back by their country of birth or origin and (b) those who will not be so received back, the existing law being left practically unaltered in respect of the former category of persons. Indians therefore will be unaffected by this measure which received the Royal assent in May 1939.

Tanganyika—In the adjoining mandated territory of Tanganyika, the Indian community were deeply concerned at the rumored transfer of the territory to Germany. Their views in regard to this subject were communicated by the Government of India to His Majesty's Government. It was learned from His Majesty's Government that the rumours were without foundation.

Nyassaland and the Rhodesias—The report of the Royal Commission which had been appointed in 1938 to inquire into the question of closer co-operation between Southern Rhodesia, Northern Rhodesia and Nyassaland was received and was under the examination of the Government of India but in view of the war the discussions have been suspended for the present.

Natal—Out of a total population of about 35,000 Indian immigrants in Natal in 1937, approximately 27,000 or 71 per cent are (according to the 1937 report of the Protector of Immigrants in Natal just published) in employment in the Provinces and many, in addition, are tanning on their own account and carrying on other trades. There is, however, considerable unemployment in and around Durban.

Of those in employment, the largest number, about 6,000, are in the sugar industry. The next largest number are in the corporate bodies, which provide employment for over 2,100. Miscellaneous industries and employment as domestic servants account for 5,650, and tea, coal and railways employ roughly 1,750.

The average rate of wages paid on the estate is 42s. 6d per month with food, accommodation, medical attention and medicine free of charge.

The total number of Indians employed in coal-mines in Natal during the year was 1,884, of whom 537 were men, 345 women and the rest children.

The wages on the mines remained about the same as before, namely, 1s. 6d. or 2s. 6d. per shift, with food, medicine, medical attention and quarters free.

The number of Indians in Natal on 31st December 1937 was approximately 171,000, of whom 38,000 were males, 28,000 females and the rest children. Of the 171,000 about 26,600 represent the original immigrants and 144,000 are Natal born.

There were 274 more births and 108 less deaths during 1937 than in the previous year, bringing the birth rate to 48.74 per mille and death rate to 11.15 per mille. The corresponding figures of 1936 were 48.84 and 15.31, respectively.

The death rate in 1937 is the lowest for the last six years. There were no arrivals during the year, emigration to Natal having been stopped by the Indian Act of 1911. The total number of Indian immigrants who returned to India during the year was 232, of which 110 were sent to India from different parts of the Union under the Assisted Emigration Scheme. The number of Indian children attending the schools, both Government and aided, is about 22,500 out of a total children population of 104,500, thus bringing the percentage to 21.

During the year there was a renewal of the agitation in Durban on the question of penetration of European areas by Indians. Protests were made by the Natal Indian Association in a letter to the Town Clerk, Durban, but at the suggestion of the Minister of the Interior who visited Durban it was agreed to establish more cordial relations between the European and Indian communities. A joint committee of representatives of the Durban City Council and the Natal Indian Association was accordingly formed. Apart from purchases of property the committee will deal with questions of Indian housing and provision of municipal amenities in Indian areas. Inaugurating the session of the committee the Agent-General to the Government of India, Sir Rama Rau, said that not only the Indian Government but also the Government of India would watch with interest the results of this experiment.

(3) Fiji and British Guiana.—Emigration to Fiji was stopped in 1917, under Rule 16 (B) of the Defence of India (Consolidated) Rules in pursuance of the general policy of stopping recruitment under the indentured system of emigration. With a view to secure, if possible, a renewal of emigration to the Colony, an unofficial mission composed of the Bishop of Polynesia and Mr. Raukine, Receiver-General to the Fiji Government, arrived in India in December 1919, and submitted a scheme of colonisation, which was referred to a committee of the Imperial Legislative Council on 4th February, 1920. To secure a favourable reception for the mission the Fiji Government cancelled all outstanding indentures of East Indian labourers from 2nd January, 1920, and also announced their intention to take early measures to provide for the representation of the Indian community on the Legislative Council on an elective basis by two members. In accordance with the recommendations made by the Committee the Government of India informed the mission in March, 1920, that they would be willing to send a Committee to Fiji provided that the Government of Fiji and the Secretary of State for the Colonies would guarantee that "the position of the emigrants in their new home will in all respects be equal to that of any other class of His Majesty's subjects resident in Fiji." In July, 1920, the Government of Fiji informed the Secretary of State for the Colonies of their willingness to give the pledge, subject to his approval. Arrangements with regard to the contemplated deputation, however, were postponed until January 1921, owing to the announcement of Lord Milner's policy in regard to Indians in Kenya, and the desirability of consulting the new Legislature in India. After consultation with the Fiji Government as to the terms of reference and personnel of the deputation, an announcement was made on the 27th June, 1921. But owing to the inability of the two Indian members, Messrs. Srinivasa Sastri and Hridaynath Kunzru, who had been nominated to join the Committee which as finally constituted consisted of Messrs. Venkatapati Raju, G. L. Corbett, Govind Sahai Sharma, and Lieutenant S. Hissam-ud-din Khan did not reach Fiji until the end of January 1922.

The labour troubles in Fiji in the years 1920-21 had produced an unexpected result in India. The Government of Fiji cancelled the indentures of Indian labourers, as from January 1920, while arrangements were made for the early repatriation of such of them as desired to return to their own country. In consequence, large numbers left Fiji. Many arrived in India comparatively destitute; while others, who were colonial born or whose long residence in the colonies had rendered them unfit for the old social conditions, found themselves utterly out of place—indeed foreigners—in their own country. Returned emigrants from other colonies also, being in difficulties owing to the unfavourable economic situation in India, strongly desired to return to the territories from which they had come. During the early part of 1921, from all parts of India there was a steady drift of destitute and distressed labourers in the direction of Calcutta where they hoped to find ships to take them back to the colonies in which they were certain of work and livelihood. At the earnest representation of the Fiji Government, and after full consultation with representative public men, arrangements were made to relax the emigration restriction in favour of those Indians who were born and had property in any colony, as well as of such near relations as they desired to take with them. Admirable work was done among these distressed persons by the Emigrants' Friendly Service Committee which had been formed primarily to deal with the applications of repatriated Indians desirous of returning to Fiji. The Government of India gave discretion to this Committee to permit persons who could prove that they had been in Fiji to return there if they so desired. The local labour conditions stimulated the return of these unfortunate people by giving them assisted passages. The Legislative Assembly had made a grant of £1,000 for the maintenance of these labourers, until such time as they were able to find work and settle down in India. The deputation from India left Fiji on the 3rd April, 1922, and submitted its report to the Government of India. It has not been published.

In February, 1929, Letters Patent under which the constitution of the Fiji Legislative Council was revised were issued. Provision was made, inter alia, for the election of three Indian members on a communal basis. On the 5th November, 1929, one of the Indian members moved a resolution recommending the adoption of a common electoral roll in place of the existing communal one. The resolution was supported by the three Indian members and opposed by the rest of the Council including the elected European and nominated Fijian members. As a protest against this vote, all three Indian members resigned their seats and, no Indian having subsequently offered himself for election, the seats remained unfilled throughout the life of the Council. A fresh election was held during 1932 and as a result two Indian constituencies returned their representatives to the Council, but no candidate offered himself for election from the third constituency.

In 1935, the elected Indian members of the Legislative Council advocated a system of nomination in place of the system of election and the proposal was opposed by the local Indian Association. European opinion was divided. The Government of India supported the principle of election and made representations to His Majesty's Government. The decision of His Majesty's Government is contained in the despatch, dated the 20th July 1936, addressed by the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Government of Fiji. The main points of the decision were—

(a) the Fijian representatives should be selected as heretofore, viz., by the Governor from a panel submitted by the Great Council of Native Chiefs;

(b) some of the European and Indian members should be elected and the others nominated;

(c) the circumstances were such as to make it impossible to arrange for representation of the three sections of the population by means of a general franchise. The Legislative Council should consist of the Governor, 16 official members, 5 European members (3 to be elected on a communal franchise and 2 to be nominated), 5 Fijian members (all to be selected as at present) and 5 Indian members (3 to be elected on a communal franchise and 2 to be nominated).

The Legislative Council as newly constituted met in September 1937.

Another important matter which is attracting attention is that of land tenure. Indians experience a number of practical difficulties connected with the leases of land and the administration of the land law and they have been brought to the notice of His Majesty's Government by the Government of India. In September 1936, the Council of Chiefs of Fiji agreed that all lands (including leases) not required for the maintenance of the Fijian owners should be opened for settlement; that to further this end a Committee should be appointed to inquire into and to determine the amount of land needed for proper development by the Native owners, and that all land (including leased) not so required should be handed over to the Government to lease on behalf of the Fijians.

In November 1939 the Government of Fiji published a Native Land Trust Bill to provide for the establishment of a Native Land Trust Board to administer all native lands in the colony and to give power to the Governor to appoint a Local Committee in any district to advise the Board on any matters affecting such land within the district. Under the Bill certain land is to be allocated for the exclusive use of Fijians and the remainder made available on lease for non-Fijians (including Indians). Government have been assured that Indians will be represented on the District Advisory Committees and that leases of non-reserved native land may be granted for periods extending up to 99 years. The Government of India made certain observations on the Bill with a view to the protection of Indian interests. The Bill was passed by the Legislative Council on February 22, 1940.

On the subject of alleged discrimination in the Fiji Civil Service the Government of India have now been assured by His Majesty's Government that there is no rule preventing the appointment of an Indian as such to any posts in Fiji except those concerned solely with Fijian administration. The Colonial Government had under consideration a proposal to fix a quota for Indian emigrants but the matter has been held over for discussion with the Government of India after the war.

British Guiana.—The Indian population in this colony belong almost entirely to the labouring classes and their grievances are mainly economic. Towards the end of 1919, a deputation consisting of the Hon'ble Dr. J. J. Nanan,

Attorney-General, and Mr. J. A. Luckhoo a prominent Indian who was a member of the combined court, visited India to put forward a scheme for the colonisation of British Guiana by means of emigration from India. This was examined by a Committee of the Indian Legislature, which advised that a deputation be sent from India to investigate conditions on the spot. Owing to certain unforeseen circumstances it was not found possible to proceed with the proposal until 1922, when a deputation consisting of Messrs. Pillai, Keatinge and Tivary visited British Guiana. Mr. Keatinge was a former member of the Indian Civil Service who had retired from the post of Director of Agriculture, Bombay. Diwan Bahadur P. Kesava Pillai was an elected member of the Madras Legislative Council of which he was also Vice-President; and Mr. Tivary was a member of the Servants of India Society who had done considerable amount of Social Welfare Work among the Depressed Classes in the United Provinces. The two reports of the deputation were published on the 21st of January 1924. Towards the end of the month a deputation from the Colony of British Guiana, consisting of Sir Joseph Nunn, Kt., and the Hon. Mr. J. C. Luckhoo, K.C., arrived in India for further discussions. The Standing Emigration Committee of the Indian Legislature eventually reported that while they would be inclined to view with favour the colonization scheme put forward by the deputation, they would, before making any definite recommendation, like the Government of India to depute an officer to British Guiana to report on certain matters. Knuwar Maharaj Singh, M.A., C.I.E., Bar-at-Law, was deputed for this purpose. He proceeded to that Colony in September 1925. His report was received on February 1st, 1926, and published. He made certain criticisms and suggestions and the whole matter was thus satisfactorily settled. The colonization scheme has not yet come into operation as the Colonial Government are not in a position at present to afford the cost which it involves.

In March 1928, following special inquiries by the Colonial Office, reports appeared in the press that a bill had been introduced in the House of Commons empowering His Majesty's Government to alter the constitution of British Guiana by Order in Council. The changes eventually introduced by the British Guiana (Constitution) Order in Council 1928, did not involve any differentiation against Indians and did not in any way infringe the provisions of the special declaratory Ordinance which was passed by the Colonial Government in 1923 and which confers equality of status on all persons of East Indian race resident in the Colony.

Nothing important about the Indian community in that colony was heard till September-October 1935, when there were labour disturbances on certain sugar estates. A Commission was appointed by the Governor to enquire into and report on (a) the causes which led up to the disturbances and (b), inter alia, the condition of labour on sugar estates; and to advise on the measures necessary to obviate the recurrence of similar disputes. From the report of the Commission, which was published in December 1936, it would appear that the disturbances were primarily of an economic character and were inspired by grievances and disabilities which the Commission found to be genuine and which were common to both African and Indian labourers, whether resident or non-resident. There is reason to suspect that the position of the Indian labourer has somewhat deteriorated in the last few years. The abolition of the indentured system was no doubt most desirable and constitutes a theoretical advance, but as things are at present the Indian labourer no longer enjoys the measure of security provided by the Immigration Ordinance in regard to pay, hours of work and other benefits and the supervision of the Immigration officers in his relation with the plantation authorities. In order to remedy this state of affairs, the Commission has recommended:

(i) the creation by Government of some authority with such powers as are considered necessary for the efficient safeguarding of the interests of both employed and employer; and

(ii) the revision of the provision of the Employers and Servants Ordinance in the light of more modern conceptions of the relations between employer and employed. As a result, the British Guiana Government has appointed a Commissioner of Labour and the other recommendations are, it is understood, still under consideration.

West Indies Royal Commission—The decision of His Majesty's Government to appoint a Royal Commission to conduct a comprehensive survey of the social and economic problems affecting the group of the West Indian Colonies was announced by the Secretary of State for the Colonies in the House of Commons on the 14th June, 1938, in the course of the debate on the Colonial Office vote during which discussion largely centred around conditions in the West Indies. The actual terms of the Commission (which were announced in the House of Commons on the 28th July) were the following:—

"To investigate social and economic conditions in the Barbados, British Guiana, British Honduras, Jamaica, Leeward Islands, Trinidad and Tobago, and Windward Islands and matters connected therewith and to make recommendations."

In view of the large number of Indians in Jamaica, Trinidad and British Guiana and the importance of the Indian case in these territories being properly presented before the Royal Commission, the question of safeguarding the interests of Indians engaged the attention of the Government of India. As a result of representations made by them, they were able to secure the approval of His Majesty's Government to the deputation of an officer to represent their views before the Commission and to assist Indians in the West Indies in the presentation of their case. Mr. J. D. Tyson, C.B.E., I.C.S., who was secretary to the Rt. Hon'ble V. S. Srinivasa Sastri, P.C., C.H., when the latter went as the first Agent in the Union of South Africa, and subsequently represented the Government of India before the Joint Select Committee in South Africa on the Transvaal Asiatics Land Tenure Amendment Bill in 1930, was the officer chosen in this connection.

The Commission concluded taking evidence towards the end of March 1939 and the report was made available to the press in October 1939. Only a summary of the recommendations of the Commission were available, the report will not be published by His Majesty's Government for the present. The Commission recommended that some other officers, preferably members of the labour department should specialise in East Indian questions and if suitable candidates are forthcoming should be East Indians. The Commission also recommended that the possibility of the appointment of suitable East Indians to posts in the Government service should be carefully borne in mind by Colonial Governments. They expressed sympathy with the complaints regarding the arrangements for legitimisation and validation of East Indian marriages and recommended that these marriages should so far as the law is concerned be put on exactly the same footing as other marriages.

In effect the commission conceded practically all the demands to which Indians themselves attached importance. The general recommendations which relate to matters of education, housing and labour administration appear satisfactory and likely to be of benefit to Indians. As an immediate step towards implementing the recommendations of the Commission His Majesty's Government have announced their decision to increase the annual allotment to the Colonial Development Fund from £1,000,000 to a maximum of £5,000,000 for ten years and to sanction annually a grant up to £500,000 for the purpose of colonial research. Though the Commission made no recommendation for the appointment of an Agent of the Government of India in the West Indies the matter continues to engage the attention of the Indian Government.

During 1939-40 Major G. Orde Browne was deputed by the Secretary of State for the Colonies to investigate and report on labour conditions in the West Indies. The Government of India have taken steps to ensure that any measures undertaken to ameliorate the condition of labour as a result of Major Orde Browne's recommendations should reach also the Indian labour population in British Guiana, Trinidad and Jamaica. The Government of India have suggested with reference to Indian labour in Trinidad that the Industrial Adviser should also concern himself with the evolution of machinery for collective bargaining among rural labour as in the sugar industry and in regard to educational institutions in British Guiana, that the Colonial Government should make every endeavour to assume direct responsibility for their management and control.

(4) OTHER PARTS OF THE EMPIRE.

Ceylon and Malaya—The Government of India maintain their own agents in Ceylon and Malaya.

The question of the fixation of a standard minimum wage for India estate labourers in Ceylon and Malaya has been the subject of negotiations between the Government of India and the Colonial Governments ever since the emigration of Indian labour to the Colonies for the purpose of unskilled work was declared lawful in 1923 under the provisions of the Indian Emigration Act, 1923.

Ceylon.—A satisfactory settlement regarding the standard wage and other outstanding questions affecting the interests of labourers was arrived at in 1927 and it was passed by the

in December, 1927.

Ordinance No. 27 of 1927. The standard rates of wages agreed upon were introduced with effect from the 1st January, 1929. In view of the considerable fall in the cost of living and the precarious condition of the rubber and tea industries during the slump, the rates of wages in mid and low country estates were reduced early in 1932, those in up-country being left intact. A further reduction in wages took place in 1933 in view of the deterioration in the position of the rubber and tea industries. While agreeing to these proposals, the Government of India stipulated that the reductions should be treated as strictly temporary and emergent and revision of rates on the upward grade should be considered as soon as the industries revived.

As soon as there was a revival of these industries towards the middle of 1933, the Government of India pressed for the restoration of wage cuts and the rates in force prior to the reductions of 1933 were restored with effect from the 1st June, 1934.

Since September, 1935, there has been little or no recruitment of Indian labour owing to the depression in the tea and rubber industries. In September, 1937, with an increase of prosperity in these two industries, the demand from the planters for extra labour became insistent. Their requirements were estimated at 20,000 labourers, but the Ceylon Government decided to permit the recruitment of only 5,000 as they were anxious to absorb suitable labour available for employment. The Government of India did not feel justified in permitting recruitment unless some revision of wages was promised and Indian estate labourers were accorded the village Committee franchise. The position in regard to the village Committee franchise is explained in a later paragraph and the question of the revision of wages was receiving the attention of the Wage Boards towards the end of 1938. Meanwhile there was no recruitment of Indian labour for the Ceylon estates.

In 1936, as a result of a resolution passed in the State Council, the Ceylon Government appointed an Immigration Commission to consider and report upon the problem of non-Ceylonese workers in Ceylon, particularly with a view to the restriction and effective control of immigration into Ceylon of workers from other countries, including assisted state labourers. Indians form the majority of the immigrants in Ceylon and they presented a memorandum to the Immigration Commissioner. The report of the Commissioner was published in April, 1938. The Commissioner came to the conclusion that, although in the absence of statistics it was not possible to estimate the extent of Indian immigration, the immigrant came to share the work when it was available and when it was not, he returned to his home; that the immigrant workers made possible an economic and general advance which could not have taken place without them; that Indians did not undercut wages; that the existing means of control of immigration were sufficient and that the restriction of Indian immigration for the protection of Ceylonese employment was not practicable.

The report is under the examination of the Ceylon Government.

Another piece of legislation affecting Indians in Ceylon was the Village Communities (Amendment) Ordinance. The amendment sought to enfranchise all persons of either sex other than Indian estate labourers thereby giving the vote to Europeans and Burghers who were previously excluded. This discrimination against Indians roused protest both in India and in Ceylon. With the object of removing the charge of obvious racial discrimination, the Standing Committee of the State Council made an amendment to the proposed Bill which had the effect of extending the franchise to those members of exempted classes, i.e., (Europeans, Indians and Burghers), who pay land tax, and possess a specified area of land (5 acres). The practical effect of this would be to enfranchise the great majority of Europeans and Burghers and leave practically the entire Indian estate labour population without the vote. A further protest was made to the Ceylon Government by the Government of India, who decided to stop the recruitment of labour for Ceylon until this question was satisfactorily settled. The Bill was passed by the State Council but was reserved by His Excellency the Governor of Ceylon for the signification of His Majesty's pleasure.

With a view to meeting the charge of racial discrimination, the relevant clause of the Bill was amended so as to exclude all labourers resident on estates, whether Ceylonese or Indian, from the village committee franchise. The Original Bill and this amendment became law on 1st January, 1939 and it is felt that though de jure discrimination against Indians has been removed, de facto discrimination remains as a very large body of Indian estate labourers till in practice be excluded from the village franchise while the effect upon the Ceylonese will be negligible.

Indo-Ceylonese relations during 1939-40 showed no improvement and feeling was further embittered by the recalcitrant attitude displayed by the Ceylon Government. Despite repeated appeals for delay from the Government and people of India the policy of so-called voluntary repatriation was brought into force by the Ceylon Government on August 1, 1939. About 600 Indian ex-employees of the Ceylon Government left the island with the promise of a bonus on reaching their homes. Attempts were continued to squeeze out Indians engaged in other walks of life, such as teachers and municipal servants. The report of the Jackson Immigration Commission, which found that far from causing any economic injury Indian immigration had been beneficial to Ceylon met with hostile reception at the hands of the Sinhalese. In view of Ceylon's attitude the Government of India decided to prohibit further migration of unskilled labour from this country to Ceylon.

The Shops Regulation Ordinance came into force from August 1, 1939 but as there was great difficulty in having closing hours of shops that portion of the ordinance which related to closing hours was not enforced. The draft of a Fisheries Ordinance was published by the Ceylon Government in 1939, its object being to prohibit any non-Ceylonese from taking fish for profit in Ceylon waters or from employing any other; person for such purposes except under the authority of a fishing license. It was stated in reply to a representation by the Government of India that in practice Indians resident in Ceylon for a number of years and carrying on bona fide fishing would experience no difficulty in obtaining licences. The Government of India were not satisfied with this reply and have made further representations to the Secretary of State for India.

The dismissal of Indian daily-paid staff in Government Departments took place on a large scale and of 1,354 Indians with less than five years service 1,225 have already been discharged. Of persons with more than five years service 1,323 have expressed their willingness to retire under the voluntary scheme. In view of these developments negotiations for a trade agreement with Ceylon were abandoned.

One result of the uncertainty engendered by the Ceylon Government's measures is the spread of labour unrest on estates. Several strikes took place and police firing on the Mooloya Estate which resulted in the death of one labourer led to important repercussions in the Ceylon State Council. A commission of inquiry was appointed to investigate the incident.

Malaya.—In Malaya, standard wage rates which were considered suitable by both the Indian and Malayan Governments were introduced in certain 'Key' areas in 1928. The rates fixed, however, were reduced by 20 per cent. with effect from the 5th October, 1930, owing to the acute depression in the rubber industry. The Government of India accepted the proposals for the reduction in the wages but they represented to the Malayan Governments that all Indian labourers who wished to be repatriated, either because they were thrown out of employment, or because they were unwilling to work on wages lower than the standard rates, should be repatriated free of cost. As a result of this suggestion, nearly 73,000 Indians obtained free repatriation between August and December, 1930. All recruitment of labour from India to Malaya, moreover, was stopped and only such persons were assisted to emigrate to Malaya as had left their families there. The depression in the rubber industry continued throughout 1931 and 1932, but towards the end of 1933 there was an upward trend in rubber prices. The figures of repatriation showed a steady decrease and it was felt that there might be a shortage of labour if prices continued to rise. The Malayan Governments stopped in 1930. Assisted emigration was resumed in May, 1934 and was regulated by a "quota" system subject to certain safeguards. This system was continued in 1934 and 1935 and was stopped from 1936 when voluntary assisted emigration was allowed without a quota. In 1936 the Government of India sent a deputation consisting of the Rt. Hon. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri, P.C., C.I.L., with Mr. G. S. Boziman, I.C.S., as his adviser, to Malaya to examine the condition of Indian labourers in Malaya with special reference to the rates of wages. During the visit of the Deputation, the Malayan Governments decided to restore half the cut which had been imposed in 1930 in so far as labour employed by them was concerned. The estates immediately followed suit and the standard rates in force on the estates were fixed at 45 cents for men and 36 for women. There was wide-spread labour unrest towards the end of 1936. The Chinese labour on estates and mines struck work and as a result secured revision of wage rates. Over 12,000 Indian labourers employed by the Singapore Municipality also struck work in November, 1936, and the Municipality decided to give a minimum basic wage of 52 cents a day to unskilled labourers, with free quarters and corresponding increases in the higher rates of wages of all labourers with effect from the 1st March, 1937. The Deputation returned to India in January, 1937, and recommended the immediate restoration of the wages of Indian labourers to the 1928 level. As a result of the correspondence between the Government of India and the Malayan Governments the latter restored the rates of 50 cents for men and 40 cents for women with effect from the 1st April 1937.

This restoration of wages was however short-lived. The condition of the rubber industry deteriorated and the Malayan Government reduced the wages of the Indian labourers by 10 per cent. with effect from the 1st May, 1938 and contemplated a further reduction of 10 per cent. from the 1st August, 1938. The Government of India asked for a statement of the reasons for the first reduction and requested that, in the meantime, the reduction of wages should be postponed. The second reduction was not brought into force and the Government of India prohibited, with effect from 15th June, 1938, all assisted emigration to Malaya for the purpose of unskilled work.

With a view to settling the differences that had arisen as a result of the stoppage of emigration to Malaya and in order to discuss other outstanding questions, the Government of India accepted the suggestion of the Malayan Governments that a delegation from Malaya should visit India. This delegation came to India in January, 1939, and discussed the various points of interest with the Government of India. The Members of the Standing Emigration Committee also met the members of the Malayan delegation and heard their views. The main question discussed was that of the rates of wages of Indian labourers in Malaya. Certain proposals for a recalculation of standard wages, partly on a fresh basis and partly on account of the changed circumstances, were made by the Government of India. The Malayan Delegation, after stating certain objections to these proposals, agreed to place them before the Malayan Governments for examination on their return to Malaya. The Malayan delegates also agreed to have the suggestion of the Indian representatives on certain other points, e.g., the status of Indians in the Malayan States, the provision of adequate educational facilities for Indians of all classes, etc., examined by their Government. Future negotiations were to be continued by correspondence and the Government of India have addressed the Malayan Government on all the points raised.

The Government of India are still in correspondence with the Malayan Government on the question of the wages of Indian labourers. The outbreak of war resulted in a considerable increase in the price of rubber and the employers of Indian labour voluntarily raised the wages of Indian labourers to 50 cents for men and 40 cents for women with effect from October 1, 1939. The Government of India are still in correspondence with the Malayan Government on the question. The Malayan Government have published two Bills to provide for : (a) the establishment of an industrial court and of courts of inquiry in connection with trade disputes, and (b) the registration and control of trade unions. A number of suggestions were made by the Government of India in regard to these bills with a view to safeguarding the legitimate interests of Indian labourers. Not all the suggestions were accepted by the Malayan Government and suitable representations have since been made to the Secretary of State for India in this matter.

Burma.—With the separation of Burma the position of Indians in that country had to be watched with special care and attention. Between July and September, 1938, Indians in Burma passed through very anxious times. Anti-Indian riots of an alarming character broke out in Rangoon on the 26th July and continued till the 1st August. As the news spread to the districts and villages, rioting took place in various districts towards the end of July and the beginning of August. In a few places rioting continued till September. Though the first outbreak of riots was brought under control, there was acute tension between the Burmese and the local Indian communities which manifested itself in a second outbreak in Rangoon early in September. Indian life and property became insecure during this period and about 11,000 Indian refugees were repatriated to India by the Shipping companies, by private relief committees and at the expense of the Government of Burma. The total number of Indians killed and injured during the riots is estimated at 164 and 711 respectively. The loss of Indian property on account of the riots is estimated between 18 and 54 lakhs.

The serious situation in Burma hastened the decision of the Government of India to send out their Agent whose appointment was already under contemplation. Mr. C. A. Henderson, C.S.I., I.C.S., a senior I.C.S. officer from Madras, was temporarily appointed as Agent and he took over charge of his duties towards the end of September 1938.

The Government of Burma appointed on the 22nd September a Committee to enquire into the riots and the personnel and the terms of reference are given below :

Personnel.—(1) The Hon'ble Mr. Justice H. B. L. Braund, M.A., Bar-at-Law (Chairman) ; (2) U. Po Han, B.A., Bar-at-Law, member of the Public Services Commission, Burma ; (3) Senator A. Rahim of Maymyo ; (4) U Khin Maung Dwe, Pleader, Mandalay ; and (5) Dr. M. A. Raut, B.A., B.C.L., LL.D. (Bar-at-Law) - Members. F. S. V. Domison, I.C.S.—Secretary.

Terms of reference.—

(1) to inquire into and report on

(a) the causes of the recent riots in Burma ;

(b) the measures and actions taken by the police and civil officers during the riots ; and
(c) the loss of life and property and the desecration and destruction of religious edifices and buildings during the riots

(2) to make recommendations for the prevention of similar communal or religious disturbances.

In view of the importance and urgency of removing the underlying causes of the riots the Committee submitted an Interim Report which was published in January, 1939. According to the Interim Report, though the immediate cause or the occasion of the outbreak of the riots was the publication, or rather the discovery, of Maung Siwe Hpi's book which is alleged to have insulted the Buddhist religion, the real causes were political, economic and social and lay deeper. The unsatisfactory conditions of land tenure and the resultant agrarian discontent ; the feeling of uneasiness which exists in the mind of the average Burmese as to the future course of Indian immigration into Burma and of its effect upon the economic and social life of the Burmese ; marriages of Burmese women with Indian Muslims and the activities of the organisations which have for their motto ' Burma for the Burmese ' were, according to the Committee, some of the more important causes of the riots of 1938. The Final Report of the Inquiry Committee was published during April, 1939, and the Recommendations made in these two reports are receiving the attention of the Government of India. The questions under active consideration are (i) compensation for loss of Indian life and property and (ii) Indian immigration into Burma.

The general improvement in Burma was unfortunately marred in the closing days of January 1940 by a communal riot in Rangoon. The casualties were estimated at 15 dead and about 150 injured. The tension did not spread into the interior and peace was restored in less than a week. In this matter Mr. R. H. Hutchings, C.I.E., I.C.S., who had succeeded Mr. C. A. Henderson, C.I.E., I.C.S., as Agent of the Government of India in Burma in September 1939, had the prompt and effective co-operation of the Rangoon City Police and the Government of Burma.

In view of the wide-spread uneasiness about Indian penetration into Burma revealed by the Riot Inquiry Committee in 1939 the Government of Burma decided to appoint a commission headed by the Honourable Mr. J. Baxter and containing one Indian representative, Mr. Ratilal Desai, to inquire into and report on the volume of Indian immigration and its ramifications. The Commission has not yet completed its work.

During the latter half of 1939 the attention of the Indian community in Burma was focussed on the Land Purchase Bill which sought to establish the principle of individual and independent property in the soil ; on the Rangoon Municipal Amendment Bill, 1937 which aimed at remedying the inadequate representation of Burman interests in the Municipality of Rangoon ; and on the administration of the Tenancy Act, 1938 which affected the Nattukottai Chettiyars Association. Representations were made by the Government of India to the Burma Government on all these matters.

Zanzibar.—The small Protectorate of Zanzibar, consisting of the two islands of Zanzibar and Pemba, has an Indian community of nearly 15,000 out of a total population of 235,000. These Indians are mostly traders, and the trade in cloves—of which Zanzibar furnishes more than 80 per cent. of the world's supply—is largely in their hands. No problems of any magnitude faced this community until July 1934, when a group of Decrees regulating the trade in cloves and prohibiting the free alienation of land by Africans and Arabs to others was passed by the Legislative Council of Zanzibar and received the assent of H.H. the Sultan.

2. So great was the apprehension of the Indian community in regard to these measures that, after an unsuccessful attempt to have their operation postponed the Government of India deputed Mr. K. P. S. Menon, I.C.S., to visit Zanzibar and examine the effect of the Decrees on Indian interests. Mr. Menon expressed the opinion that (i) the clove legislation, i.e., the 'Clove Growers' Association Decree and Clove Exporters' Decree, and (ii) the Land Alienation Decree, were objectionable from the point of view of the Indian community. In regard to (i) he stated in his Report, which was published in January 1935, that its effect would be to drive from the market most exporters of cloves and also middlemen in the internal market, who as already explained were almost entirely Indians.

3. After consideration of Mr. Menon's recommendations and the comments of the late Resident of Zanzibar thereon, detailed comments on the Decrees were communicated to His Majesty's Government by the Government of India. Eventually, as a result of their representations, His Majesty's Government deputed Mr. B. H. Binder, a Chartered Accountant, to Zanzibar in April 1936 to review the position of the Zanzibar clove industry. With the concurrence of His Majesty's Government the Government of India deputed Mr. G. S. Bozman, I.C.S., to act as an observer in connection with the enquiry.

4. Mr. Binders Report was published in November 1936 and he made the following recommendation for the control of the clove trade with the object of securing a fair price to the producer and preventing wide fluctuations of prices.

(i) Internal marketing.—The purchase of cloves should be restricted to licensed buyers, a sole licence to buy and receive deposits of cloves being in the first instance granted to the 'Clove Growers' Association. The Association should fix purchase prices according to quality from time to time, if possible for each season, and in so doing should take into account the profit or loss on each year's working. The Association should have the power to appoint district representatives and local agents for purchasing cloves from the growers, to be selected from existing local dealers and shopkeepers irrespective of nationality.

(ii) Export trade.—No sales should be made by the Association except for export and to licensed exporters. The Association should not export direct unless overseas buyers desire to buy direct or other circumstances arise which necessitate this course. The right to limit the number of licensed exporters should remain but the licence fee should be reduced to a sum which would be within the means of the small exporter and the levy on the export of cloves should be abolished.

(iii) Advisory Committee.—Mr. Binder recommended the establishment of an Advisory Committee, to consist of two representatives of growers, one for Zanzibar and one for Pemba, two representatives of exporters and one of the C.G.A. to confer from time to time with the Board of the Association and to discuss the purchase and sale prices to be fixed.

5. Mr. Binders' recommendations were opposed both by the Indian community in Zanzibar and public opinion in India. Legislation which substantially gave effect to these recommendations was, however, passed in the shape of the Clove (Purchase and Exportation) Decree, and came into force on the 1st August 1937. As a result of representations by the Government of India, safeguards were provided in the form of (i) an assurance that all Indians previously engaged in the internal trade who applied for them would be given buying agent's licenses and (ii) Indian representation on the Board of Management of the C.G.A. to the extent of a total membership of seven and on the Advisory Committee to the extent of two members out of six. These modifications, however, did not satisfy the Zanzibar Indian community, who refused to nominate their representatives, and organised an almost complete boycott of the clove trade, both in the internal market and on the export side. Their sympathisers in India also organised an equally effective boycott of imports of Zanzibar cloves into this country; in this connection it must be remembered that over 26 per cent. of the cloves exported from Zanzibar normally come into this country, and that India is almost the sole market for cloves of the best quality.

6. The whole question of the clove trade was now re-examined by the new Resident in the light of the boycott and, following representations by the Government of India, the Government of Zanzibar, with the approval of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, prepared a modified scheme for the control of the clove trade. Details of this scheme were explained in a memorandum which was published simultaneously in Zanzibar and India on the 3rd March 1938. The main feature of the scheme was the withdrawal of the monopoly of the 'Clove Growers' Association in the internal market. Any licensed dealer was to be free to purchase cloves, either from producers or from other licensed dealers, at prices to be arranged between themselves and to store cloves as long as they wished. Producers indebted to Government under the Land Protection (Debt Settlement) Decree (explained in paras 10 and 11 below) were to sell only to the 'Clove Growers' Association, but other producers were to be free to sell their cloves to the Association or to any licensed dealer. All cloves were to pass through the Association, before ultimate export, but the Association itself was not to sell to principal overseas markets as long as the normal flow of exports was maintained.

7. The Government of India were of opinion that the proposals were not free from certain features held to be objectionable by local

Indians and suggested that the possibility of evolving a satisfactory formula acceptable to them should be explored by means of a conference at which alternate proposals and matters of detail could be discussed. The Government of India also offered to depute an officer to render all assistance in effecting a settlement, if the proposal found favour with the Zanzibar Government. This was readily acceded to by them and the Government of India selected for this purpose Mr. G. S. Bozman, I.C.S. (who had been deputed to Zanzibar in 1936 in connection with Mr. Binders' enquiry)—a choice which was welcomed by the Zanzibar Indian National Association.

Mr. Bozman reached Zanzibar in the middle of April 1938. Though the outlook for an amicable settlement seemed rather gloomy at various times during the negotiations, it became possible to announce an agreement on the 5th May, thanks to the co-operation of the local Indian community and the accommodating spirit of the Zanzibar Government.

8. The main objections of the Indian community to the original proposals were (i) that participation in the export trade was very much restricted, (ii) that freedom of purchase in the internal market was permitted only with producers not indebted to Government, and (iii) that the proposed transport scheme for the conveyance of cloves from producers was liable to be used as an inducement to attract all sale of cloves to the Clove Growers' Association. According to the compromise arrived at, exporters are free to purchase up to 50 per cent. of the quantity to be exported from other than the Association's stocks, so that half the export trade is not subject to control. In the view of the Zanzibar Government this measure of control could not be dispensed with if export prices are to be maintained at a stable level. As regards the internal market, producers indebted to Government are under obligation to sell to the Clove Growers' Association only so much of their stocks as will set off the instalment due to Government under the debt redemption scheme. Under the modified transport scheme, cloves will be brought to market centres where dealers and the Clove Growers' Association will have an equal chance with the producer. The agreement has been given effect to by the Clove Decree, 1938, and so far has been working smoothly.

9. Closely allied with the control of the clove trade were the problems of indebtedness and the restrictions on the alienation of land. The land alienation Decree passed in 1934, besides restricting the passing of land out of the hands of the Arab and African plantation owners into those of Indians, established, for one year in the first instance, a moratorium on debts secured on land mortgage. This moratorium was later extended from time to time, pending a settlement of the whole problem of indebtedness. Mr. Menou's inquiries in regard to these questions also discussed a position unsatisfactory from the Indian point of view. After consideration of his recommendations the Government of India suggested to the Government of Zanzibar that the position was such as to require review. The latter agreed to make a fuller investigation of the indebtedness question, and appointed a Commission for the purpose. This Commission, which included one Indian member (Mr. Tayabali Rajabali), produced a report which on the whole supported the position taken up by the Indian community in this respect. The Government of Zanzibar, however, found themselves unable to accept the report as it stood and formulated alternative proposals.

10. Representations were made by the Government of India and after considerable discussion, a Bill drafted by the Attorney General of Zanzibar in consultation with Sir Ernest Dowson was passed into law as the Land Protection (Debt Settlement) Decree, which came into force on the 1st December 1937. The principal features of the scheme embodied in the Bill are :—

(a) Adjudication of the debt with a view to ascertaining the actual amount lent (or value of goods delivered on credit) and allowing a fair rate of interest thereon.

(b) Valuation, by an officer appointed by Government for the purpose of both mortgaged lands and lands sought to be attached by unsecured creditors.

(c) The Government to pay off the creditor to the extent of the value of the land threatened, and to assume the position of mortgagee, in respect of the amount paid.

(d) Where the value of the land as estimated by the officer appointed to value it is insufficient to satisfy the debt, the creditor will be free to challenge the valuation either by instituting a suit for foreclosure or sale or by applying for an order for sale or attachment.

(e) On any such proceeding being taken, the Court will in the first instance proceed to value the property in such manner as it considers proper, unrestricted by the rules contained in the Bill which govern the actual valuation.

(f) The Court's valuation must not be less than the official valuation. If it is greater the Government must give effect to it, unless the debtor himself prefers that the proceedings against his land which have commenced shall take their ordinary course.

(g) Repayment by the debtor of the amount advanced by the Government on his behalf and interest thereon to be effected by suitable instalments having due regard to the necessity of leaving means at his disposal to provide for the proper husbandry of the land and for the livelihood of himself and his family.

The moratorium imposed by the Land Alienation Decree of 1934 was lifted at the same time. The new scheme has, on the whole, met with a favourable reception from all communities in the Protectorate.

The Decree was assented to by the Sultan on June 16, 1939. From information received from the Indian Trade Commissioner in East Africa the Government of India understand that the clove agreement continues to work smoothly. So far as can be judged from the figures of total clove exports from the Protectorate and the business handled by Indian firms, Indians have recovered the full share in the trade which they had in 1934 and there is no doubt that this position is a direct outcome of the agreement.

Mauritius.—In April 1924, the Government of Mauritius requested that emigration to the Colony might be continued for a period of one year, but the Government of India in consultation with the Standing Committee on Emigration decided that consideration of the request should await the results of a local investigation. The Government of Mauritius agreed to receive an Officer for the purpose and to give him all facilities; and in December, 1924, an Indian Officer of Government, Kunwar (now Sir) Maharaj Singh, left India to conduct the necessary inquiry.

Sir Maharaj Singh's report was published by the Government of India in August 1925. The various recommendations in the report were commended to the consideration of the Colonial Government.

In February, 1926, the Government of India received a reply from the Colonial Government stating that they accepted the main conclusion formulated by Kunwar Maharaj Singh in regard to the renewal of emigration to Mauritius, viz., that no more unskilled Indian labour should be sent to Mauritius either in the immediate or near future. With regard to Kunwar Maharaj Singh's suggestions relating to other matters of interest to the Indian population resident in the Island, the Colonial Government expressed their willingness to give effect to several of them.

The condition of Indians in this Colony continued to remain satisfactory till 1937 when there were labour disturbances on certain sugar estates employing Indian labour. The Colonial Government appointed a Commission to enquire into and report on the disturbances. The commission reported during 1938 and the most important recommendations of the Commission related to the necessity for the formation of a Department of Labour and the enactment of suitable labour legislation in place of the Labour Ordinance of 1922 which mainly dealt with indentured labour. Both recommendations have been given effect to and the Labour Ordinance of 1938 which closely follows the Malayan Labour Code should prove of considerable benefit to the Indian labourers, a large number of whom are employed on sugar estates. The Industrial Associations Ordinance of 1938 provided for the regulation of conditions of employment, the establishment of machinery for the peaceful settlement of disputes and generally the formation of industrial Association. This Ordinance, it will be observed, provides for collective bargaining by industrial labourers.

It was learned that the Colonial Government in agreement with the local merchants had instituted a scheme for the licensing of importers—the rice import trade is chiefly in hands of Indian merchants—under which each licensee is required to set aside in the Government granary not less than 20 per cent of each consignment imported at any one time so as to serve as a reserve stock. No complaints have reached the Government of India regarding this scheme.

Canada and Australia.—The present position of Indians in the Dominion is that under the Canadian Dominion Election Act, Indians domiciled in Canada enjoy the federal franchise in eight out of the nine provinces. In the province of British Columbia, Indians do not enjoy the provincial or the Dominion franchise. Efforts so far made to remove this disability have not been successful. In Australia, Indians enjoy the franchise on the same footing as all other British subjects. In Australia, sub-section (5) of section 39 of the Commonwealth Electoral Act, 1918-24, was amended in 1925, by adding after the word "Asia" the words, "except British India." This measure gives the Commonwealth franchise to subjects of British India at present domiciled in Australia and is the fruition of the hopes held out by the Commonwealth Government to Mr. Sastri on the occasion of his visit to Australia in 1922. As a result of the representations made in London in 1930 informally by the late Sir Muhammad Shah at the instance of the Government of India to the Prime Minister of Australia, the electoral law of Queensland has also been revised to enfranchise the British Indians resident in that State. It was, therefore, in Western Australia alone that Indians did not enjoy the suffrage in respect of election for the Lower House. This disability was also removed at the end of 1934. By Acts which have recently been passed by the Commonwealth Parliament, British Indians in Australia have been admitted to the benefits of Invalid and Old Age Pensions and Maternity allowances from which they were hitherto excluded as Asiatics. Old Age Pension is payable to men above 65 years of age, or above 60 years, provided such persons are of good character and have resided continuously for at least 20 years. An Invalid Pension is obtainable by persons, who, being above 16 years of age and not in receipt of an Old Age Pension, have whilst in Australia, become permanently incapacitated for work by reason of an accident or by reason of being an invalid or blind, provided they have resided continuously in Australia for at least five years.

Maternity allowance to the amount of £5 is given to a woman of every child to which she gives birth in Australia, provided the child is born alive and the woman is an inhabitant on the Commonwealth or intends to settle there. The last grievance of Indians in Australia which was removed by the Commonwealth Government.

Indians in Great Britain.

Some seventy years have gone by since the Parsee community, in the persons of the late Dadabhai Naoroji and other members of the firm of Cama & Co., led the way in the sojourn of Indians in England for business purposes. This lead it has since maintained, though there are both Hindu and Mahomedan business men firmly established there. Nor are the professions unrepresented, for there are in London and elsewhere practising barristers, solicitors and medical men of Indian birth. The number of the latter, especially Parsees, is considerable. Three Indians (all belonging to the Parsee community) have sat in the House of Commons. Since 1910 six Indians—the late Mr. Ameer Ali, the first Lord Sinha, the late Sir Binode Mitter, Sir Dinsha Mulla, Sir Shadi Lal and Mr. M. R. Jayakar—have served on the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. Three Indians are Advisers to the Secretary of State for India. In 1919, the late Lord Sinha was the first Indian to be raised to the peerage and to be appointed a member of the Home Government.

India House.

High Commissioner for India.—This post was first established in 1920 and its various permanent incumbents have been:—

Sir Wm. Meyer, I.C.S. (Retd.), 1920-22. Sir Dadabhai Merwanjee Dahhl, 1923-24. Sir Atul Chandra Chatterjee, 1925-31. Sir Bhupendra Nath Mitra, 1931-36. Sir Feroz Khan Noon, 1936.

In March, 1930, the office of the High Commissioner for India was transferred from the inadequate premises in Grosvenor Gardens to the new India House in Aldwych, erected and furnished at a cost of £324,000. The design of this noble building, which has a frontage of about 130 ft. opposite the Waldorf Hotel, was the work of Sir Herbert Baker, A.R.A., with Dr. Oscar Faber as consulting engineer. Although expression of the Indian character of the building is mainly found in the interior, the architect has given to the details of the external elevation, by means of carving, heraldry, and symbolism an individuality that proclaims it the London house of India. Including basement and mezzanine floors, there are twelve floors in all, the available space for clerical work alone being between 50,000 and 60,000 ft. The total height from the low level in the courtyard on the Strand side to the roof is about 100 ft.

On the ground floor there is a great hall for exhibits of the products and art wares of India. This hall is carried up two floors, the upper floor being represented by a wide gallery, and on either side of the exhibition hall there are recesses after the style of an Indian bazaar for special exhibits. From the octagonal entrance hall a great public staircase leads to a gallery round the octagonal hall on the first floor. This gallery in its turn leads to a high vaulted library and reception rooms, and the central portion of the library provides accommodation for large receptions on special occasions.

The staircase, exhibition hall, octagonal hall and library markedly express the Indian character of the building. The walls of the staircase and the halls are of red stone similar in appearance to the Agra and Delhi sandstone, carved and pierced in the geometrical patterns of the jali in Indian architecture. Such of the carving as could be completely separated from the structure was actually worked at New Delhi by Indian workmen from Makara marble. The use throughout of Indian hardwoods, chiefly gurgan, for flooring obviates the need for any floor covering. From basement to roof scarcely any wood of non-Indian origin was employed. For panelling and decorative purposes in all parts of the great building silver gray, koko, laurel and the beautiful dark red padouk have been used. The domes and vaults of the building have been embellished by mural paintings, the work of specially selected Indian artists. The water supply is entirely independent of municipal service, being obtained from two artesian wells sunk some 460 ft. below the basement, where the central heating apparatus is installed.

The Indian Trade Commissioner and his staff are at India House, with all other departments of the Office of the High Commissioner excepting the Stores Department which is at the depot off the Thames at Belvedere Road Lambeth.

The Students.

Under normal conditions it is the student community which constitutes the greatly preponderating Indian element and creates a constant problem. Its numbers multiplied ten or twelve fold in the quarter of a century before the war. After a very considerable temporary check caused by the Great War the number rapidly expanded from 1919 in spite of pressure on college accommodation. In addition to the ordinary graduate or under-graduate student, there are some youths of good family, including heirs of Indian States, admitted into the public schools, such as Eton and Harrow. There are some 500 Indians at the Inns of Court. Since the war there has been a welcome increase in the number of technical and industrial student. Altogether including technical and medical students, there are fully 2,000 young Indians (some five per cent. of them women) in London, Edinburgh, Cambridge, Oxford, Glasgow, Manchester, Birmingham, Leeds, Sheffield, Liverpool and a few other centres. London absorbs about half the total.

Sport.

India is a country which is getting more and more sport conscious and in every branch of it progress can be detected. Sport on the whole is well organised and improvements in this direction are being made.

There is a Board of Control for Cricket which is doing excellent work for the game. It controls the Cricket Championship of India, a knock-out tournament between the various cricketing provinces, the symbol of the championship being the "Ranji Trophy," a magnificent gold cup of unique design, which keeps green the memory of that illustrious Indian cricketer, P. R. Ranjitsinghji. The Bombay Pentangular tournament, between teams representing the various communities in the country, continues to be the biggest attraction of the cricket year and the huge Brabourne Stadium in Bombay proved inadequate to accommodate the huge crowds which wanted to watch some of the matches, particularly those between the Hindus and the Muslims. This fine ground has room for 32,000 spectators and is one of the finest cricket arenas in the world.

Football.—The All-India Football Federation is the controlling body for football, a game which has made tremendous strides in recent years, though there is at the moment no accepted championship tournament. The two premier competitions are the Indian Football Association Shield played in Calcutta and the Rovers Cup competition played in Bombay. Football is controlled through subordinate provincial associations in affiliation with the Federation each province managing its own affairs, but recognising one another's rulings. The institution of a rule by the parent body preventing the wholesale transfer of players during the season, has proved to be one of the most beneficial pieces of legislation the game has met with so far.

Hockey—Hockey is also governed by an All-India Federation which does for that game what the others do for cricket and football. Hockey has an official Championship of India competition, between provincial teams, the trophy being a quaintly carved Maori shield which was presented to India by the Maoris when an Indian team toured New Zealand. Besides the championship the principal tournaments are the Aga Khan Cup in Bombay and the Beighton Cup in Calcutta, though there are many other similar competitions throughout the country. Hockey in fact is easily the most popular team game in the country and the standard of play is the best in the world, which is proved by the fact that India has won the championship at the last three Olympic Games.

Athletics—There is an All-India Olympic Association, the most of the pro- . . . not approach . . . here was an appreciable improvement at the Ninth Indian Games held in Bombay in January 1940, but in no event did the performance approach international standard. Lack of tracks and suitable training grounds is a big handicap to progress being made but the governing body is tackling this question and already preparations are being made for the construction of cinder and cycle tracks at Patiala.

Tennis—Tennis is looked after by the All-India Tennis Association through its provincial associations and a definite effort is being towards the improvement of the standard of play by the attention which is being given to the appointment of expert coaches and the selection of promising young players for those coaches to work on. The aim of the Association is the training of a Davis Cup team and there are a few players who already show great promise of developing into first class players, judged by world's standards.

Other Games.—Most of the other games have their controlling organisations. Table Tennis being the latest to form an All-India controlling Federation and this game is catching on wonderfully among all classes. In billiards there is still room for considerable development, so with badminton, while Aquatics is still unorganised though there are local bodies carrying on in some districts. Rowing shows signs of increasing in popularity while Amateur Boxing, while strong in Bombay, Bengal and in the Services, is still in its infancy in most other parts of the country.

The Turf.—The Turf is well organised the Royal Calcutta and the Royal Western India Turf Clubs being the chief organisations, between them controlling practically all the courses in the country. The standard of racing is very high. Some of the finest thoroughbreds in the world find their way to Indian courses, but the country bred animal still lags a long way behind. Both Turf Clubs have taken steps to encourage the breeding and racing of the indigenous product. The courses at Calcutta and Bombay bear comparison with any in the world and racing is practically continuous throughout the year.

Golf.—Almost every town of any size has its golf course but there are few of them which compare with others in other parts of the world. A fine course has recently been laid out in Bombay and is already reckoned to be the best in the country.

Yachting still struggles for existence Bombay being its stronghold while some of the large up-country lake see yacht racing at some time or the other during the year.

Rugby football is played in a few centres by the Europeans but this is a game the Indian has shown little aptitude for.

Indian Titles: Badges.—An announcement was made at the Coronation Durbar in 1911, that a distinctive badge should be granted to present holders and future recipients of the titles of 'Diwan Bahadur', 'Sardar Bahadur', 'Khan Bahadur', 'Rai Bahadur', 'Rao Bahadur', 'Khan Sahib', 'Rai Sahib' and 'Rao Sahib'. Subsequently the following regulations in respect of these decorations were issued:—(1) The decoration to be worn by the holders of the titles above mentioned shall be a badge or medallion bearing the King's effigy crowned and the name of the title, both to be executed on a plaque or shield surrounded by a five-pointed star surmounted by the Imperial Crown, the plaque or shield being of silver gilt for the titles of Diwan, Sardar, Khan, Rai and Rao Bahadur, and of silver for the titles of Khan, Rai, and Rao Sahib. (2) The badge shall be worn suspended round the neck by a ribbon of one inch and a half in width, which for the titles of Diwan and Sardar Bahadur shall be light blue with a dark blue border, for the titles of Khan, Rai and Rao Bahadur light red with a dark red border, and for the titles of Khan, Rai and Rao Sahib dark blue with light blue border.

A Press Note issued in November, 1914, states:—The Government of India have recently had under consideration the question of the position when miniatures of Indian titles should be worn, and have decided that they should be worn on the left breast fastened by a brooch, and not suspended round the neck by a ribbon as prescribed in the case of the badge itself. When the miniatures are worn in conjunction with other decorations, they should be placed immediately after the Kaisar-i-Hind Medal.

Indian Distinguished Service Medal.—This medal was instituted on June 28th, 1907, by an Army Order published in Simla as a reward for both commissioned and non-commissioned officers of the regular and other forces in India. It bears on the obverse the bust of King Edward VII and on the reverse a laurel wreath encircling the words For Distinguished Service. The medal, $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches in diameter, is ordered to be worn immediately to the right of all war medals suspended by a red ribbon $1\frac{1}{2}$ in. wide with blue edges $\frac{3}{8}$ in. wide. This medal may be conferred by the Viceroy of India.

Indian Order of Merit.—This reward of valour was instituted by the H. E. I. Co. in 1837, to reward personal bravery without any reference to length of service or good conduct. It is divided into three classes and is awarded to native officers and men for distinguished conduct in the field. On the advancement from one class to another the stars surrendered to the Government, and the superior class substituted, but in the event of the death of the recipient his relatives retain the decoration. The order carries with it an increase of one-third in the pay of the recipient, and in the event of his death the allowance is continued to his widow for three years. The First Class consists of a star of eight points, $1\frac{1}{2}$ in. in diameter, having in the centre a ground of dark-blue enamel bearing crossed swords in gold, within a gold circle, and the inscription Reward of Valour, the whole being unmounted by two wreaths of laurel in gold. The Second Class star is of silver, with the wreaths of laurel in gold; and the Third Class entirely of silver. The decoration is suspended from a simple loop and bar from a dark-blue ribbon $1\frac{1}{2}$ in. in width with red edges, bearing a gold or silver buckle according to class.

Order of British India.—This order was instituted at the same time as the Order of Merit, to reward native commissioned officers for long and faithful service in the Indian Army. Since 1878, however, any person, European or native, holding a commission in a native regiment, became eligible for admission to the Order with no reference to creed or colour. The First Class consists of a gold eight-pointed radiated star $1\frac{1}{2}$ in. in diameter. The centre is occupied by a lion statant gardant upon a ground of light-blue enamel, within a dark-blue band inscribed Order of British India, and encircled by two laurel wreaths of gold. A gold loop and ring are attached to the crown for suspension from a broad ornamental band $\frac{5}{8}$ in. in diameter, through which the ribbon, once blue, now red, is passed for suspension from the neck. The Second Class is $1\frac{1}{4}$ in. in diameter with dark-blue enamelled centre; there is no crown on this class, and the suspender is formed of an ornamental gold loop. The reverse is plain in both classes. The First Class carries with it the title Sardar Bahadur, and an additional allowance of two rupees a day and the second the title of Bahadur, and an extra allowance of one rupee per day.

Indian Meritorious Service Medal.—This was instituted on July 27th, 1888, and on receipt of the medal the order states "a non-commissioned officer must surrender his Long Service and Good Conduct medal"; but on being promoted to a commission he may retain the M. S. medal, but the annuity attached to it will cease. On the obverse is the diademed bust of Queen Victoria facing left, with a veil falling over the crown behind, encircled by the legend Victoria Kaisar-i-Hind. On the reverse is a wreath of lotus leaves enclosing a wreath or palm tied at the base, having a star beneath, between the two wreaths is the inscription for meritorious service. Within the palm wreath is the word India. The medal, $1\frac{1}{2}$ in. in diameter, is suspended from a scroll by means of a red ribbon $1\frac{1}{2}$ in. wide. The medals issued during the reigns of Queen Victoria's successors bear on the obverse their bust in profile with the legend altered to EDWARDS or GEORGIUS.

The Kaisar-i-Hind Medal.

This decoration was instituted in 1900, the preamble to the Royal Warrant—which was amended in 1901, 1912, 1933 and in 1938—being as follows:—"Whereas We, taking into Our Royal consideration that there do not exist adequate means whereby We can reward important and useful services rendered to Us in Our Indian Empire in the advancement of the public interests of Our said Empire, and taking also into consideration the expediency of distinguishing such services by some mark of Our Royal favour: Now for the purpose of attaining an end so desirable as that of thus distinguishing such services aforesaid, We have instituted and created, and by these presents for Us, Our Heirs, and Successors, do institute and create a new Decoration." The decoration is styled "The Kaisar-i-Hind Medal for Public Service in India" and consists of three classes. The Medal is an oval-shaped Badge or Decoration—in gold for the First Class, silver for the Second Class and in bronze for the Third Class—with the Royal Cypher on one side and on the reverse the words "Kaisar-i-Hind for Public Service in India"; it is suspended on the left breast by a dark blue ribbon.

During the Rajasaheb's absence in England and the Continent she was in sole charge of the administration of the State as the Regent and made the fullest use of this opportunity to demonstrate her capacity for administration and her solicitude for the welfare of the people of the State. She has a religious turn of mind and with this her simplicity of habits and unassuming generosity of heart form a rare combination that makes her an object of reverence and affection both in and outside the palace.

BENARES: H. H. MAHARAJA VIBHUTI NARAIN SINGH BAHADUR, (minor) the present Ruler of Benares.

Born on 5th November, 1927.

Succeeded April 5, 1939.

H. H. the Maharaja being a minor, the administration of the State is carried on by a Council of Administration having Mr C. R. Peters as its President and Mr. S. Ali Zamin, Khan Bahadur, Vice President, Mr. Vishwanath Prasad as Judicial and Education Member and B. Jhar-khandi Prasad Narain Singh as Palace Member.

The State of Benares under its Hindu Rulers existed from time immemorial and finds mention in the Hindu and Buddhist literature. In the 12th century it was conquered by Sahab-ud-din Ghorî and formed a separate province of the Mohammadan Empire. In the 18th century, Raja Mansaram, an enterprising Zemindar of Gangapur, obtained a Sanad from the Emperor Mohammad Shah of Delhi in the name of his son Raja Balwant Singh in 1738 and founded the Benares State, which comprised the four Sirkars of Benares, Ghazipur, Jaunpur and Chunar. Raja Mansaram died in 1740 and his son Balwant Singh became the virtual ruler. During the next 30 years attempts were made by Safadar Jung and after him by Shuja-ud-daula of Oudh to destroy the independence of the Raja, but the latter withstood them successfully, strengthened his position and built the fort of Ramnagar on the bank of the Ganges. Raja Balwant Singh died in 1770 and was succeeded by his son Chet Singh. He was expelled by Warren Hastings. Balwant Singh's daughter's son Mahip Narain Singh was then placed on the Gadi. The latter proved an imbecile and there was mal-administration which led to an agreement in 1794 by which the lands held by the Raja in his own right, were separated from the rest of the province. The direct control of the latter province was assumed by the British Government under an arrangement by which the surplus revenue was granted to the Raja while the former constituted the Domains. There was thus constituted what for over a century was known as the Family Domains of the Maharaja of Benares. On the 1st of April, 1911, the major portion of these Domains became a State. The town of Ramnagar and its neighbouring villages were ceded by the British Government to the Maharaja in 1918 and became part of the State. The State now consists of three districts, viz., Bhadohi, Chakia and Ramnagar.

The British system of administration in the U. P. is closely followed.

BHOPAL: LT.-COL. HIS HIGHNESS SIKANDER SAULAT IFTIKHAR-UL-MULK NAWAB MUHAMMAD HAMIDULLA KHAN, BAHADUR, G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., C.V.O., B.A., the present Ruler of Bhopal, succeeded his mother, the late Her Highness Nawab Sultan Jehan Begum, in May 1926, when weighed down by age and cares of state, she abdicated in his favour. Previous to his accession, His Highness had actively participated in the administration for nearly ten years as Chief Secretary and afterwards as Member for Finance and Law and Justice. His Highness was also the Chancellor of the Chamber of Princes during 1931-32, and attended the various sessions of the Round Table Conference in London to advise and participate in the deliberations of that body and its committees on the subject of political reform in India.

In the game of polo His Highness is well known as one of the greatest players of the generation and enjoys international fame. No less conspicuous are his achievements in administration, which works directly under his personal and active supervision.

PRINCESS ABIDA SULTAN—SURNAMED AFTER HER RENOWNED GRANDMOTHER, HER HIGHNESS THE NAWAB SULTAN JAHAN BEGUM, C.I., G.C.S.I., etc., is the eldest daughter of His Highness the present Ruler of Bhopal and Begum-consort, Her Highness the Nawab Maimuna Sultan Shah Banu Begum Sahiba. The Princess who is officially entitled the Nawab Surayya Jah Gauhar-i-Taj Begum is the heiress-apparent to the throne.

Born : On the 28th August 1913. She was brought up and educated in Bhopal under the enlightened guidance of her illustrious grandmother. In 1933, the Princess was married to Nawab Sarwar Ali Khan Sahib of Kurwai, and has one son.

With her special knowledge of the humanities of classical Arabic and Persian, the Princess combines the best accomplishments of the western education which she received under tutors of outstanding abilities. She is well known as an accomplished musician, a fine rider and polo player, a good shot, and an entertaining conversationalist quite at home in a large variety of modern topics.

For some years past, the Princess is being initiated in the art of administration under the care and guidance of her own talented father, His Highness the present Ruler of Bhopal. During this period she has held charge of the Private Estate of His Highness as Chief Secretary in the Department of Deon Khas which is entrusted with the administration of the estate and large schemes of Agricultural Development. BIKANER: GENERAL HIS HIGHNESS MAHARAJADHIRAJ RAJ RAJESHWAR NARENDRA SHIROMANI MAHARAJA SRI GANGA SINGHJI BAHADUR, G.C.S.I., G.C.I.E., G.C.V.O., G.B.E., K.C.B., A.D.C., LL.D., the present Ruler of Bikaner, was adopted by his brother, the late Maharaja Sri Dungar Singhji Bahadur. A fine type of Rathore Rajput, he affords an admirable example of what modern training can do for an Indian Prince. He is the twenty-first Ruler of Bikaner since its foundation by Rao Bikaji in 1465 A.D., and is worthily upholding the traditions of his illustrious house for gallantry and loyalty. The figure twenty-one is regarded by Indians as a very lucky number and it has proved to be so for the Bikaner State, because the Maharaja has not only brought it to a pitch of efficiency and prosperity but in his time Bikaner has ranked among the foremost States of India and proved to the world what pillars of strength the Princes can be to the Empire. The services rendered by His Highness' Government form one of the brightest chapters in the history of British connection with India.

Born : On 13th October 1880.

Succeeded to the Gadi on 31st August 1887, and assumed full ruling powers in 1898.

Educated : In 1889 he entered the Mayo College at Ajmer, studied there till 1894. His Highness' career at the College, where he won seven medals and many other prizes, was exceptionally brilliant.

His Highness represented India at the Imperial War Cabinet and Conference held in England in 1917 and in Peace Conference in 1919; was one of the signatories to the Treaty of Versailles by virtue of his appointment as one of the Plenipotentiaries, Commissioners and Procurators in respect of the Indian Empire by His Imperial Majesty the King-Emperor under the Royal Sign Manual and Signet; received the Freedom of the Cities of London, Edinburgh, Manchester and Bristol; represented the Ruling Princes of India at the Assembly of the League of Nations, 1924; was leader of Indian Delegation to the Assembly of the League of Nations, 1930; was one of the three representatives of India at the Imperial Conference, 1930; and was a Member of the Indian States Delegation to the Indian Round Table Conferences, London, 1930-31 and 1931-32.

The Rathore clan of Rajputs has always been a race of warriors. It was by means of the sword that His Highness' ancestors conquered and maintained, sometimes against overwhelming odds, the territory that has now come down to His Highness. The warlike spirit of the race has remained intact and on more than one occasion the Maharaja has proved himself a worthy scion of the distinguished race of warriors to which he belongs.

The establishment of the Walter Nobles School and the Dungar Memorial College are outstanding monuments of His Highness' zeal for education. Education, in all its stages and to all classes of people, is imparted free in the State; and liberal scholarships are awarded to boys for higher education outside the State. The enactment of free compulsory primary education, the opening of a large number of Girls' Schools, the progress of the Boy Scout Movement, the opening of Libraries are among other features of the progress made by the State in education.

The State possesses in the Capital two large and thoroughly well-equipped General Hospitals, one for men and one for women, costing over Rs. 15 lakhs. These Hospitals are under the charge of doctors of eminence and are recognised as two of the leading institutions in India. There are common to both the Hospitals—

an X-Ray and Radium Institute,
Pathological Department,
Ophthalmic Department, and Dental Department,

all under highly qualified specialists.

There is also a well equipped separate T. B. Hospital in the Capital.

The State also maintains an efficient Medical Department which through the agency of 47 hospitals and dispensaries provides adequate medical relief throughout the territories of His Highness. A Maternity and Child Welfare Centre also functions in the City.

It is not possible, in the space at our disposal, to detail all the measures of reform carried out by His Highness as the record has been one of phenomenal progress and development. Great improvements have been made in every branch of the administration and continuous attention is being paid to measures for securing the happiness and good government of the people. While the revenue has shown a marked increase, the expenditure on the nation-building activities has kept pace with the increased revenue.

No Indian Prince is better known or more honoured in the Empire than His Highness Maharaja Ganga Singhji who has to his credit a brilliant record of service to the British Crown which is neither surpassed nor equalled by any other Ruler of India. It is said that the path of duty is the path of glory, but in these days of scientific progress the discharge of duty alone without the power of brain, industry and sacrifices cannot help a leader in the position of the Maharaja of Bikaner, to rise to his fullest power. He has attained his unique position not only by a strict application to duty but by marvellous driving power that has been the surprise of those who came in contact with him. His Highness won the affection of his people during the long period of his brilliant and honourable rule by his constant industry, strenuous labour and sacrifices for their best interest. There have been times in his remarkable career when the strain of work has impaired his robust health but he has refused to quit his post. A Prince who can conceive and execute a gigantic scheme costing several crores of rupees for fertilizing the barren and thirsty soil of Bikaner desert, whose income, not very many years ago, was only 20 lakhs of rupees, cannot but be a great genius; but this remarkable achievement does not stand alone; another sum of nearly three crores of rupees has been spent on railways, and to-day there is a network of railway in the State, the total open mileage being 852·29 miles. When to those are added the large sums of money spent for public welfare, modern educational institutions and well-equipped modern hospitals, one obtains an idea of the enormous stride of progress in Bikaner and the benefits which the people have derived from the benevolent rule of one of the greatest Rulers that Rajputana or any other part of India has produced. Compare the State as it is now with what it was twenty years ago, and the rapidity of the extent of progress it has made becomes still more obvious. The achievements of Maharaja Ganga Singhji will form enduring monuments of his services to the State.

His Highness was one of the first Ruling Princes in India to introduce a civil list for the governance of his personal expenditure, which he revised with the idea of increasing the benefits to his subjects. For some time he held the finance portfolio in his own hands and managed with the greatest magnanimity and with the one object to make his subjects the better able to meet the strain which the irrigation works had placed upon them. The brilliant results of his loving labour for his beloved subjects during the best years of His Highness' life are patent in the great schemes which have been brought into existence, and for all the money laid out a substantial return is assured apart from the increased prosperity which the irrigation brings to the public.

That a Ruler possessed of such rare distinction and rarer sense of duty, who has served his State in a spirit of whole-hearted devotion, worked for the promotion of its economic interest day in and day out and who has served the Empire with distinction on many historical occasions should also be a valuable asset to his own Order is natural and not at all surprising. He has been unsparing in his efforts to maintain the rights, the privileges and the dignity of the members of his own Order and as a distinguished Chancellor has served the Chamber of Indian Princes with a spirit of devotion and ability that has left a permanent mark in the history of that Chamber.

His Highness the Maharaja of Bikaner has shown how the reform giving his people an active share and interest in the management of their country, may be introduced without belittling the dignity and rightful position of their reigning Prince, but rather with the effect of enlarging his happiness by giving him the supreme pleasure of watching his subjects grow in prosperity and contentment and of knowing in his innermost heart that his care and labour have made that possible and brought it about. By such exalted service all India is helped upon her way. For his devotion to India His Highness is entitled to the grateful acknowledgment of all who love India as their Motherland.

His Highness completed the 52nd year of his reign in 1939.

Lime and its derivatives form the chief industry of the State and a company has just been floated for the manufacture of Cement and its bye-products.

The agricultural and horticultural produce of the State include food grains, oil seeds, sugar-cane, fruit, etc., etc.

The presence in the State of inexhaustible deposits of the finest Limestone almost on the surface—with the railway passing through its heart from end to end is a promising factor for a wide industrial development—while there still remain very good prospects for industries like the manufacture of oil, soap, sugar, alcohol, dry ice and the like.

A thorough overhauling of the State machinery and remodelling it on up-to-date British Indian lines, a Council with a majority of non-officials and presided over by the Ruler (established in 1928) to run the administration of the State, construction and remodelling of the town, administrative buildings, palace, Guest-Houses and roads, Electricity, Irrigation Canals, Schools for free education and Charitable Hospitals are some of the conspicuous improvements that mark the progressive and prosperous regime of the present Ruler.

Mayurbhanj ranks first in point of population among the States of the Eastern States Agency, numbering forty-two, twenty-six of which were till recently known as the Orissa States, fourteen as the Central Provinces States, and two as the Bengal States. The history of its Ruling family goes back into hoary antiquity and numerous copper plate grants and archaeological finds testify to its powerful sway, and to the vast domains that constituted the territory of the Bhanja Kings, for hundreds of years. Its geographical and strategic position constituted it an important buffer State at the time when the East India Company and the Mahrathas were engaged in a struggle for supremacy in Eastern India and Mayurbhanj assisted the British cause. During the Mutiny of 1857, the Ruler of Mayurbhanj again distinguished himself as a loyal ally of the East India Company. The State is administered very much on British Indian lines, judicial independence, which has been secured under a full-powered High Court, being a special feature of its administration. The State is rich in mineral and forest resources and supplies the bulk of the iron ore needed for the Tata Iron and Steel Works of Jamshedpur. The activities of the Geological Department, recently organised by the State, are likely to lead to valuable results. The present administration is making every effort to promote the industrial interests of the State. The Maharaja is keen on aviation, and the State owns three aeroplanes and maintains a well-equipped aerodrome at Baripada, the capital of the State.

Partabgarh State, also called the Kanthal, was founded in the sixteenth century by a descendant of Rana Mokai of Mewar.

The town of Partabgarh was founded in 1698 by Partabsingh. In the time of Jaswant Singh (1775-1844) the country was overrun by the Marathas, but the Maharawat arranged to buy off the Holkar by agreeing to pay Salim Shahi Rs. 72,700 (which then being coined in the State Mint was legal tender throughout the surrounding Native States), in lieu of Rs. 15,000 formerly paid to Delhi. The first connection of the State with the British Government was formed in 1804; but the treaty then entered into was subsequently cancelled by Lord Cornwallis and a fresh treaty was made in 1818. The Cash Contribution formerly paid to Holkar, is being paid to the British Government under the terms of the treaty of Mandsaur and was, in 1904, converted to Rs. 36,350 British Currency. As the amount of Cash Contribution was excessive, it has been reduced to Rs. 27,500 from the year 1937-38. The State enjoys plenary jurisdiction. The highest administrative and executive office is termed "Mahakma Khas" where sit His Highness and the Dewan of the State. There is a duly graded judiciary under a High Court. Succeeded 23rd March, 1938, on the demise of his father Maharaja Sir Bhupindra Singhji Mahendra Bahadur.

Since his accession to the Gadi His Highness has introduced many reforms of far-reaching character. The creation of a separate Public Health Department and a department of Rural uplift, the improvement of Medical Services in the State through the introduction of touring dispensaries, the abolition of many "Birs" and game preserves in the plains, the remission of arrears in land revenue, the passing of Small Towns Act, the building of an Olympic Stadium at Patiala and the establishment of the Bhupindra Cement Works, are but a few instances of His Highness' great initiative in promoting the welfare and prosperity of his people.

His Highness is an all round sportsman—a first class shot, a great angler, a crack tennis player and superb cricketer. It is, however, in cricket that his prowess is so well known. He was awarded the All-India Colours in 1933, when he played against the Australian team in the last match at Bombay. The State is rich in antiquities, especially at Pinjour, Sirhind, Bhatinda, Narnaul, etc. It possesses valuable forests. 138 miles of broad-gauge Railway line have been constructed by the State at its own cost. Since the State entered into alliance with the British Government, it has rendered help on all critical occasions. Its proud record of service during the Great War is unsurpassed. No sooner the present war was declared than His Highness placed his services and the resources of the State at the disposal of the British Government. As the leader of the Sikhs, he issued a special appeal to his community to render all possible help in securing an early victory to the British arms.

In recognition of his exceptional administrative abilities the present Ruler was installed to the gadi in November, 1933 when he was only 21 years old.

He has introduced remarkable constitutional and administrative changes within the short period of seven years since he took the reins of government. He has set up a council of Ministers who do not only advise him on all important matters of administration but are also responsible for the successful running of the departments under each. He has completely separated the judiciary from the executive by creating a separate High Court with a bench of two judges. He has introduced all possible beneficial activities in the State under his personal supervision. He is easily accessible and is in constant contact even with the poorest of his subjects. Minute details of every branch of administration interest him very much. He works hard in the interest of his people and is fully keeping up the traditions of his illustrious forebears who have ever been recognized as rulers running a model administration. He is a young man of versatile genius and has been taking keen interest in all the federal and administrative discussions affecting the States carried on in regional groups and in the Chamber. He has this year been elected as a member of the Standing Committee of the Chamber of Princes.

The Rural Uplift Committee which was appointed by him in the year 1937 to make an economic survey of the State and go into the amount and extent of rural indebtedness has submitted its report. In pursuance of its recommendations a permanent Rural Development Board has been formed. The activities of this Board cover Co-operative movement, Co-operative Banking, Marketing, Education, Medical help, Communication and Industries. The Co-operative movement has received a great impetus from the activities of this Board and is rapidly extending to all the villages. The question of Rural Indebtedness, which is only ten times the land revenue in this State as compared to the average of nineteen times in the rest of India, has been taken up seriously by this Board. This question, difficult as it is, has been tackled by an enactment, the Sirmoor Relief of Indebtedness Act on the one hand and by the Nahan

National Bank on the other. A Central Agricultural Demonstration Farm is going to be set up very soon and various cottage industries are to be introduced within two or three months. An Agricultural Exhibition takes place every year, which is utilized to teach the agriculturists by means of lectures, slides and demonstrations all the modern methods of agriculture, maternity and child-welfare, and village hygiene and sanitation.

Many prohibitive restrictions on the shooting of wild animals have been removed. Every cultivator has been allowed free grazing for a certain number of cattle. Several important concessions and forest rights have been given to the agriculturists. The question of consolidation of holdings and fixity of tenures is being seriously considered by the Development Board. Several primary and upper primary schools for boys have been opened in villages. A scheme for Free Primary Education of a type best suited to the needs of agriculturists is being worked out. The Mandals Kanya Mahavidyalaya, which was started about three years ago is now a full fledged Girls' High School.

Communications are being developed very rapidly. The construction of a main road connecting Nahan with the Tehsil headquarters of Renka a distance of about 22 miles is already under construction. Feeder roads are being developed by the District Board, and village roads are being constructed by co-operative methods in the villages where Co-operative Societies exist. In addition to the existing Allopathic Hospitals and dispensaries which exist at Nahan and at the Tehsil headquarters, and the St. John Ambulance touring doctor, qualified Vaidas have been appointed to administer indigenous medical aid to the agriculturists.

The Maharaja, an all-round sportsman, takes great interest in the training and progress of the Sirmoor Sappers and Miners, commanded by an experienced English Military Officer, Major C. A. Grant Rundle, M.C. The Force served in Afghanistan and offered aid in Egypt. They served in Mesopotamia also, but were unfortunately shut up with General Townshend's forces in Kut, and only a small portion of the corps, which was employed at the base at Basra, escaped capture. On the outbreak of the War in 1939 His Highness offered Rs. 50,000 as his first contribution for War Purposes Fund, which was thankfully accepted by His Excellency the Crown Representative. His Highness further put his personal services and the services of his troops at the disposal of the Government. The Re-organization and the training of the Sirmoor Sappers are going on very fast for this purpose.

His Highness is Colonel-in-Chief

Travancore is one of the most populous and important of Indian States and occupies the south-west corner of the Indian Peninsula. It is bounded on the North by the State of Cochin and the District of Coimbatore, on the East by the Districts of Madura, Ramnad and Tinnevely and on the South and West by the Indian Ocean and the Arabian Sea. It is one of the most picturesque portions of India, containing an extensive hill region, numerous rivers, and a succession of backwaters and vast forests.

The State now stands in the fore-front of educated India. According to the Census of 1931, the number of literates per 100 of the population, excluding children under 5 years of age, is 28.9. For males, the figures are 40.8 per 100, and for females 16.8.

Although the Ruler of Travancore is legally the source of all authority, judicial, administrative and legislative, yet for more than half a century the Maharajas have acted as constitutional monarchs, without, however, failing to maintain effective personal contact with the administration of the State. His Highness the present Maharaja, has not only sedulously adhered to these great traditions of his House, but has readily responded to all the legitimate aspirations of his subjects. In November 1936, His Highness promulgated the epoch-making Proclamation throwing open all the temples under his control and that of his Government to all classes of Hindus, including those hitherto regarded as untouchables, a reform which evoked universal satisfaction and thankfulness all over the world. By another Proclamation in November 1937, a University designed specially to promote technological studies and research has been established. The Government of His Highness have taken in hand the first instalment of a scheme of nationalising the transport system of the State, and have established the Travancore Credit Bank for granting long-term loans to the agriculturists and small industrialists of the State. To reduce unemployment and to exploit the immense natural resources of the State, the Government have embarked upon a programme of industrialisation.

Among the first fruits of the State's policy of industrialisation may be mentioned, the Pallivasal Hydro-Electric Scheme, the Ceramic Factory at Kundara and the Travancore Sugars and Chemicals Ltd. The last mentioned is a company incorporated in Travancore and is manufacturing, besides Sugar, 26 varieties of pharmaceutical products such as liniments, liquid extracts, liquors, pulves, spirits, syrups and specialities including caffeine-spirit, aspirin and lysol.

The Government of the State is conducted in the name and under the control of His Highness the Maharaja. There is a Legislature consisting of an Upper and a Lower House, with a majority of elected members and possessing large legislative and financial powers and powers of interpellation.

H.H. Maharani Setu Parvati Bayi, Mother of His Highness.

Trivandrum, the capital of Travancore, is a terminus of the South Indian Railway. The whole State is covered by a network of roads and canals with a well regulated system of road and water transport. SANDUR is the only Mahratta State in South India. The ancestors of the Ruler of Sandur distinguished themselves under Chatrapathi Shivaji Maharaj, the great Mahratta hero, and his family and for the useful services thus rendered to the House of Satara, the Jaghir of Gajendragad in the Bombay Presidency, with the title of "Hindurao," was conferred on them. Raja Siddoji Rao Ghorpade, the founder of this Dynasty conquered Sandur and Kudatini in the early eighteenth century. Raja Siddojirao Ghorpade was also receiving tribute from the Poligar of Harpanahalli. During the time of his son and successor, Raja Murar Rao Ghorpade, renowned in history as the famous "Chief of Gooty," Sandur reached the zenith of its territorial expansion and was a power to be reckoned with among the various belligerents for political supremacy in South India. Speaking of the extent of the territory and sway held by Raja Murar Rao Ghorpade, Rao Saheb G. S. Sardesai the famous Historian of the Mahrattas, has observed thus: "Stray notices of the Ghorpades in Karnatak are discovered in old papers here and there, and refer to such places as Sondha, Bednur, Savanur, Shira, Shrirangpatnam, Chittaldurg, Gutti, Sondur, Guntakal, Kadappa, Trinopolis and as far as Chennapatna (Madras) and Pondicherry on the east coast. The career of Murar Rao appears to claim all this region as his legitimate heritage, acquired by the heroism and often by the blood of the several members of the large Ghorpade Family. It was the great Shivaji who first traversed this large territory, and after him, it was the valour of the Ghorpades that prevented in it the extinction of the Maratha Power." Sir Philips Gibbs writing as recently as June 1938 has described the signal assistance rendered by Murar Rao to Lord Clive at the siege of Arcot thus: "It happened that, on the flanks of Raja Saheb's Army, a tribe of wild Mahratta Horsemen, under a Chief named Murar Rao, was watching the progress of the siege, with increasing admiration. Clive sent out messengers to him, and his joy may be imagined when the Indian chieftain expressed his willingness to unsheath his sword in aid of so gallant a captain. All that night Clive and his men awaited a renewal of the assault, but when morning came, the enemy were no more to be seen, and the glittering array of the Mahratta tribesmen moved through the mist of dawn to do honour to the man who was to be famous henceforth as Sabat Jung." Orme, a contemporary British Historian describes the Sandur troops to be "the best soldiers of native Indians at this time in Indostan." In the Mysore Treaty V of 1782 the British have observed thus: "The Company will reserve to themselves the liberty of reinstating the Family of Murar Rao in the Country of Gooty," a promise which yet remains to be fulfilled. The Ruler of Sandur for the first time came into political relations with the British in 1817, and Munro described the Ruler of Sandur to be "as much a Sovereign in his own valley as any Prince in India." The State has the status of a Treaty State by virtue of the Treaty of 1847 with the East India Company regarding Ramgad cantonment jurisdiction. The Ruler of Sandur is one of the 146 important Ruling Chiefs who received the Sanads of Adoption in 1862. The State possesses powers of life and death and is unfettered in the exercise of its sovereignty. The State pays no tribute to the Crown and is free from all pecuniary demands.

The State has rich mineral wealth particularly manganese, iron and gold.

The Ruler is the fountain head of all authority, Judicial, Executive and Legislative. The Government of the State is conducted in the name of the Huzur through an Executive Council. A State Council has been constituted in 1931 with a predominant non-official majority. It has the right to initiate legislation, to move Resolutions and to ask questions. An independent Chief Court has been constituted under the Sandur Chief Court Act, II of 1932 and arrangements have been made with the Madras Government to lend the services of the District and Sessions Judge, Bellary, for appointment as the Nyayadish of the Sandur Chief Court. The Sandur Chief Court can state cases to the Federal Court. A further step in constitutional advance has been taken by the Ruler in reviving the ancient body known as the Darbar which is as old as the State itself, and which is now charged with the governance of the State as a second Chamber. By a Proclamation issued in 1933, the Ruler has thrown open all temples, religious institutions, wells, schools and all government institutions to the Harijans.

DALMIA, SETH RAMKRISHNA, born 1893, married 1910 Durgadevi Rama, his only child, married to Seth Shanti Prasad Jain.

Seth Ramkrishna Dalmia is of simple, austere habits and uses only the barest necessities of life. He and all members of his family wear pure khadi and eat the plainest food. His schooling was desultory, but by assiduous home study he mastered principles of economics and finance and also studied English, Hindi, Bengali and Gujarati. A keen business instinct, a suave tongue, a virile brain and endearing manners have won for him a pre-eminent position in the business world. His unfailing judgment of men and matters and unerring insight into trend of events make him master of every situation.

He has rare oratorical gifts, his extempore speeches enthrall his hearers and carry them with him. He keeps himself abreast of latest developments in world politics, trade and industry. Yet he devotes hours daily to a comparative study of religion and ethics. His knowledge of Hindu scriptures and philosophy is very extensive. Having monumental achievements in the realm of trade and commerce to his credit, Seth Dalmia views them with a sense of detachment and sincerely believes that God fulfils Himself through him.

His charities run into nullions. The yearly income of a trust created by him is utilised in awarding scholarships to promising young men for scientific studies in foreign countries. He spends lavishly in providing amenities of life to labour employed in his factories.

He became interested in industries in 1931 and started within a few weeks two huge sugar factories which rank among the biggest of their kind in India. In 1934 he bought another sugar factory equally as large and in 1936 purchased the largest block of Bharat Insurance shares and acquired its management. To the sugar factory at Dalmianagar, he has added three more units, a paper mill, a cement factory and a chemical plant.

He entered the cement industry in 1937 and within a very short time established cement factories at Dalmianagar in Bihar, Dalmia Dadri near Delhi, Dalmiapuram in South India, Dandot in the Punjab and at Karachi. The factories at Dalmianagar and Karachi are the largest single unit plants in India.

His younger brother, Seth Jai Dayal Dalmia, who has an almost idolatrous regard for him, is his right hand. Such a devoted brother is very rare in these days. Address Dalmianagar.

GANGWAL: RAJA BAJRANG BAHADUR SINGH SAHEB, the present Raja of Gangwal Estate, belongs to the well-known Janwar (Pandava) clan, the ancestor of which was Pururwa whose capital was Preyag (Jhansi). His son Baryar Shah came to Ikauna in Sambat 1325 of Bikarmajit and settled there. His great-grandson, Bhaya Partap Singh under a partition came into the possession of Taluqa Gangwal personally. The present Raja is the 8th in descent from Bhaya Partap Singh.

The Raja Saheb has a firm belief in Hindu Mythology and has a great love for the ancient script and literature, especially the Vedas and Gita, etc. Though outwardly he appears to be a man of very strict nature, he carries a very gentle and kind heart within. The various kinds of help he has rendered to the public, especially to the poor, both inside and outside his estate, are too numerous to mention and are bare manifestations of his kind-heartedness.

Another very outstanding feature of his life is that he has always been of great help to students and has given stipends to poor and deserving students to enable them to continue their education as far as possible. He has also left no stone unturned for the increase of education especially the learning of ancient Hindu Literature and has always liberally subscribed to several educational institutions.

Simple living and high thinking is the motto of his life. It is a unique feature of his behaviour that though he is a staunch follower of Hinduism, he has equal regard for all other religions.

The major part of his valuable time is spent in the welfare of his subjects and even the smallest unit of the estate has easy access to him in necessity. Raja is the hereditary title vide F. D. Notification No. 6331, dated the 9th December 1864 A.D.

JAIJEE, BHAI (SARDAR)
HARCHAND SINGH of Patiala.

Born: 30th Poh 1948,
Bikrami corresponding to 1892 A.D.

History: A scion of the well-known family called the "Jaijee" family, Bhai (Sardar) Harchand Singh Jaijee traces the history of this family to the time of Baba Alla Singh, the founder of the capital and State of Patiala.

While Baba Alla Singh was fighting his battles and consolidating his victories with a view to controlling effectively the territories conquered and prosecuting his life mission of founding a state, the ancestors of the Jaijee family were fighting shoulder to shoulder with him. Baba Ladha Singh of this family and his son Ramditta Singh participated in many such battles. When Baba Alla Singh was besieged in Sunam Fort, both Baba Ladha Singh and Ramditta Singh risked their lives in the face of overwhelming hostile forces and rescued him from the grip of the enemy. Once they all combined and conquered the entire territory. In appreciation of such brave and heroic deeds, the Maharaja of Patiala conferred the distinctive title of Bhai on the Jaijee family—the descendants of Baba Ladha Singh. To this day this title is much valued, in fact more valued than the title, Sardar, which is an epithet common to all Sikhs. In the reigns of Maharajas Karam Singh and Narinder Singh, Sardar Bir Singh, the great-grandfather of Bhai Harchand Singh Jaijee, was the Commander-in-Chief of Patiala forces. Later his son Sardar Kehar Singh was Chief Judicial Officer of Maharajas Narinder Singh and Mohinder Singh; and Sardar Gulab Singh, Bhai Harchand Singh's father, was the Excise Commissioner of Maharaja Rajinder Singh, grandfather of H. H. Maharajadhiraj Yadvinder Singh, the present ruler of Patiala, who is ninth in succession to the founder of the State, Baba Alla Singh.

Thus the two great families, the Royal family of Patiala and the Jaijee family, are connected by ties of love, service and loyalty extending over a long time, and these exist to this very day. The recent marriage of H. H. Maharajadhiraj Yadvinder Singh of Patiala and the daughter of Bhai Harchand Singh Jaijee is in consequence hailed as the cementing seal on the history of these relations existing for generations.

A great and noble personality, Bhai (Sardar) Harchand Singh Jaijee has rendered invaluable services to the cause of the nation. The Sardar is held in high esteem by all, Sikhs and other communities alike, and his alliance with the Patiala State is looked upon by the public with great satisfaction and good-will.

There are several very interesting chapters, one of which is a special one on the Advent of the Prophet Muhammad, as prophesied in the Scriptures of World Religions with original references from the Bible, Atharva Veda, Bhavishya Purana and Zend-Avestas. KUREISHY: RAFIUSHAN
IFTIKHARUL MULK, KHAN
BAHADUR, LT.-COL., HAJI
MAQBOOL HASSAN, M.A., LL.B.,
Home Minister, Bahawalpur Government: belongs to a respectable family of the Kureish of Arabia.
Though hailing originally from the Meerut District, his ancestors had long settled in the State, before he was born at Bahawalpur in 1900.
He received his early education in the State, and, later on, joined the Muslim University, Aligarh, where he passed his M.A., LL.B. in 1925.
From his earliest childhood he exhibited traits which gave promise of his future eminence.

His personal magnetism made itself felt in the sphere of his employment, where he won the golden opinions of his colleagues as well as the ruler under whom he served. He began his career in 1925, when he joined the personal staff of His Highness the Nawab Ruler Bahadur of Bahawalpur as an Aide-de-Camp. But, it did not take long to discover that the young incumbent had in him the makings of a capable administrator. Accordingly, in less than two years from the date of his appointment, he was promoted to the rank of Assistant Military Secretary. But this was only a stepping stone, as in January 1930 he was given the combined office of Private and Military Secretary, with the additional charge of the portfolios of Education and Municipalities, and was, subsequently, raised to the status of Minister-in-Waiting. In 1932 he paid a visit to England and other Western countries in company with His Highness the Nawab Ruler Bahadur—a visit which he repeated in 1935 and in 1936. The beautiful volume in which he has chronicled the impressions of his first itinerary is an eloquent testimony of his great powers of observation and expression. He has also been to the Near East and performed the holy pilgrimage. Recently, his services to the State were recognised by the Government by the grant of the title of Khan Bahadur, which is the first distinction of its kind to be conferred upon a purely Riyasti Vizier in the State. He is also the recipient of many decorations and distinctions from the State, and is His Highness the Nawab Ruler Bahadur's representative in the Senate of the Punjab University.

During the 10 years of his incumbency he has been in charge of several departments, and in each he has left the impress of his personality in the shape of many useful administrative reforms which he introduced from time to time. It is due mainly to his efforts that the Chief Court of Bahawalpur has been raised to the Status of High Court. He is a very capable and efficient administrator, having won the highest praise of both the ruler and the ruled by his politeness, impartiality, and keen sympathy with the people of the State. He is immensely popular with all classes of His Highness's subjects.

YUSUF: NAWAB SIR MUHAMMAD; Kt., Barrister-at-Law, is the biggest and most influential landholder in the eastern districts of the United Provinces. He is a hereditary Nawab and has been a member of the Legislative Council since the inauguration of the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms in 1921. He was appointed a Minister in 1926 and continued in that office for nearly 12 years until the introduction of the Provincial Autonomy. He was also in the Interim Ministry formed under the new constitution. He has travelled widely and has made a special study of the people and problems of the United Provinces. He has rendered great public service by infusing a real spirit of self-government in the local bodies which has enabled and encouraged them to discharge their duties and obligations towards the public more effectively and efficiently. His personal interest and guidance in the affairs of the local bodies has been responsible for greater amenities to the public. It was through his patronage that the U.P. District Boards' Conference was originated and has been working so successfully.

The high standard of the provincial roads that the province can rightly boast of is the result of the continuous and untiring efforts of Nawab Sir Muhammad Yusuf in the Public Works Department. The great progress made by the Public Health Department, the increasing efficiency and popularity of the Medical Department, the growth of the co-operative movement and the general efficiency of the Registration and Veterinary Departments are all due to his sound and efficient administration during the last 12 years. He has always shown the spirit, initiative and enthusiasm for the good of the people and the province.

His services in the cause of the landholders are too well-known to be reiterated. In the well-being and uplift of the zemindars and the tenants he has always evinced keen and personal interest. An active worker of the Agra Province Zemindars' Association, he carried on an intensive campaign throughout the province and did his best to consolidate the position of the zemindars. In fact, it would be no exaggeration to say that the Agra Province Zemindars' Association is a lasting monument to his untiring and zealous efforts.

Several educational and religious institutions owe their existence to his generous and charitable disposition. His courtesy and obliging nature have won for him a popularity which is coveted by so many to-day. He has always been very popular in the Council and during his term of office as Minister wielded enormous influence over the members of the Legislative Council. He is the best speaker on Government benches and his influence in the councils has proved beyond a shadow of doubt that he is a pillar of real strength both to the Government and the public at large.

He is one of the most influential leaders of the Muslim community of all-India importance. He has contributed in no small measure in maintaining and consolidating the solidarity of the Mussalmans in India and has helped them in following a wise and sound policy in the interests of the country. He has rendered signal services to the Muslim community and by dint of his patriotism, is held in high esteem by persons of all schools of thought.

He is universally liked and respected both by officials and non-officials—Muslims and non-Muslims,—and in him one can find a real example of a selfless worker who is always striving to do some real good to the people. His impartiality is well-known and he commands the confidence of the Hindus and Muslims alike in these provinces.

Address: 57, Newherry Road, Lucknow.

The Calendars.

A full Calendar will be found at the beginning of this hook. Below are given details of the other Calendars in use in India.

The Jewish Calendar is in accordance with the system arranged A.D. 358. The Calendar dates from the Creation, which is fixed as 3,760 years and 3 months before the beginning of the Christian Era; the year is Luni-solar.

The Mahommedan, or era of the Hejira, dates from the day after Mahomet's flight from Mecca, which occurred on the night of July 15, 622 A.D. The months are Lunar.

The Fasli year was derived from a combination of the Hejira and Samvat years by the order of Akhar; it is Luni-solar. The Bengali year seems also to have been related at one time to the Hejira, but the fact of its being Solar made it lose 11 days each year.

The Samvat era dates from 57 B.C., and is Luni-solar. The months are divided into two fortnights—sudi, or bright and badi, or dark. Each fortnight contains 15 tithis, which furnish the dates of the civil days given in our calendars.
